Fund Drive Fears Gay Backlash

United Way Concerned About Donors After Yielding to Prejudiced Agencies

by Jay Newquist

In the midst of its $51 million fall campaign, the United Way of the Bay Area is worried about a possible backlash from the gay community since the charity recently dropped recommendations for a policy that would have demanded member agencies hire gays and lesbians.

John Stafford, media relations director at UW, said the policy met a considerable homophobic reaction from its member agencies. The UW feared that would jeopardize many other contributions.

He reported that 400,000 donors in the Bay Area gave $47 million in 1987. That was funnelled to 287 local charities. The 1988 campaign kicked off Sept. 8 and runs through Dec. 8.

But what about the reaction of the gay community now that the affirmative action policy has been put back into the closet?

"We winced about the effect on gay and lesbian donors because we had to back away from the hiring policy," Stafford said.
"There was a degree of resistance (from agencies and donors) that took us by surprise. We felt we couldn't go on without harming the UW."

He said that UW would continue to fund gay services. "We're making a real effort to be more responsive to gay and lesbian needs with a growing base of resources, and we can do a lot more," he said.

Stafford indicated it was ironic that UW was reaching the gay community for the first time and then backed down on the jobs policy. He explained that an existing policy of prohibiting job

Governor Blasted on Support For Dannemeyer Proposition

Polls Indicate Close Vote Expected on Prop. 102; Deukmejian's Move Could Boost Anti-102 Effort

by Allen White

Governor George Deukmejian's announcement that he was supporting Prop. 102, Rep. William Dannemeyer's sweeping AIDS initiative, stunned many. But opponents of Prop. 102 were quick to fire back a volley at the governor's move. And while some are saying Deukmejian's endorsement may backfire, campaign organizers said the closeness of the election pointed out the necessity for gay and lesbian voters to turn out at the polls next Tuesday.

The most recent California Poll showed a weakening of support for Prop. 102. But still more of the state's voters favored it (44 percent) than opposed it (32 percent). Opponents are hoping that Deukmejian's endorsement will bring enough attention to the issue to educate voters on the proposition. Once informed, they say, voters tend to go against A hastily called press conference last Friday afternoon gave the opportunity for leading health and AIDS officials to soundly present the case in opposition to Prop. 102. Further attention was given Friday night, when over 2,000 people marched through the streets of San Francisco to show their anger at the action of the governor.

ction of the governor.

Dana van Gorder, campaign coordinator for Californians Against Prop. 102, said the press across the state was not favorable for the governor. Deukmejian issued a four-paragraph statement, while opponents were able to quickly produce informed spokespeople who could speak to the issues.

In Sacramento, commentator Bob Cook took to the air during the evening news on Channel 40 to blast the governor. Cook said the reason the governor chose to endorse Prop. 102 was simply to appease his major right-wing fundamentalist contributors.

Cook pointed out that virtually all of the members of the governor's own AIDS advisory committee have urged a no-on-102 position. At least three members of that panel have resigned in protest.

Tim Wolfred, director of the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, said, "This is partisan politics at its worst. The people most affected by AIDS are people George Deukmejian doesn't like. Gay people, poor people, black people, brown people, needle users. So why not let more of them die, because that is what is going to happen if Prop. 102 passes. Obviously the governor doesn't care about the people who are going to die because of this measure."

Dr. Mervyn Silverman, head of AmFAR, the American Foundation for AIDS Research, commented, "If you read this proposition, you won't vote for it. It has no place in good public health practice, and every AIDS expert and researcher in the world I know of agrees with that. I hope the citizens of the state of California listen to that."

Of Deukmejian he said, "There is absolutely no question that the man is irresponsible. This move shows a lack of leadership and an absolute lack of compassion for everyone. It demonstrates that even though states elect people to their highest office, people can hold those seats who have no right to be there."

Dr. David Werdegar, director of San Francisco's Public Health Department, said Deukmejian took a stand against the La-Rouche initiatives and stated that 102 was basically a rewrite of those measures. He also pointed out that 102 will repeal key pieces of legislation which were applications.

proved by the governor. Among those are the anonymous testing sites, which will be legislated out of existence by this measure.

Werdegar said, "I can't believe that he is doing this on medical advice, so I believe it says something of his perception of where votes lie. I question his sense of judgment, his sense of compassion. I wonder if he realizes the enormity of it. You know, most people don't realize that Prop. 102 is the most important proposition on the ballot. I can't believe he realizes how much damage he is doing."

It was pointed out that the California Medical Association is concerned at the alarming number of doctors who have discussed destroying medical records. If Prop. 102 passes, information about AIDS in medical records of every person in California would become available to employers and insurance companies.

With only a few days left until the election, the shift has turned to getting out the vote. Wolfred said, "Every vote is going to count. It is going to be a very close election. If you have an aunt or uncle in Orange County, whatever, you should make a call and make it clear to them that they have to vote against this."

Mervyn Silverman added that "Everyone has to get out and vote on this one. There can be no complacency. If it passes, it only has to pass by one vote to become the law of this state. A law which is going to have detrimental effects on what we are going to do."

Dr. Werdegar said that every vote "is absolutely critical. We believe that opposition to 102 has been gaining. I think that we want to do everything we can to sustain that and get people out to vote."

Friday night, over 2,000 people participated in a rally and a march through the streets of San Francisco in opposition to Prop. 102 and the governor's position. The angry marchers walked through the Castro, yelling, "Out of the bars and into the streets!" Hundreds left their drinks and joined the march.

Turning down Market Street, the marchers seized both sides of the street as they walked in the face of oncoming traffic. At Market, they turned up Van Ness and went to the Bush for President headquarters, where they were met by a wall of riot-duty police.

The group then moved over to Polk, went to the top of Nob Hill, and then down Powell Street to Union Square. They then proceeded through the Geary theater district and over to the governor's San Francisco office in the State Building. They then walked back up Market Street.

The march was joined at Church and Market by José Sarria. In full drag, José led the march to its conclusion at Castro Street.

The move by Gov. Deukmejian in favor of 102 has served to emphasize the position against the measure by Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis. Gay community leaders worked successfully to get Dukakis to take a stand against 102.

Governor Dukakis, speaking in San Francisco, said, "There has got to be strong presidential leadership on this issue. We've got to attack the problem very aggressively."

Kitty Dukakis, speaking at a national AIDS conference in San Francisco, said, "We need a president who will banish the ignorance that leads to Prop. 102—the dangerously misguided attempt by politicians to deal with the AIDS crisis.

"Proposition 102 won't cure AIDS. It won't stop the spread of the disease. It will only spread fear, suspicion, and panic. Isn't it time we declare a war on the virus and not on the people it has infected?" said Mrs. Dukakis.

The presidential election, too, said gay activists, underscores the need for the gay vote to turn out.

Dr. Koop Bashes Proposition 102

U.S. Surgeon Gen. C. Everett Koop told the San Francisco Examiner Tuesday that AIDS research will be stymied for up to five years if Prop. 102 is approved by Califiornia voters on Nov. 8.

"It would drive people who could participate in drug trials away from research and underground," Koop told the Examiner. "Everything we have done may step backwards five years.

"There's no one in public health who supports this measure," continued Koop. "It is contrary to every principle of public health I know."

Election Night Rally Planned for Castro

Castro Street in San Francisco will become the site of either celebration or angry reflection on election night. Organizers from ACT UP (the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power) are calling on San Francisco's lesbian and gay community to "Stand out and shout," as the rally is billed.

On Tuesday, Nov. 8, from 8 p.m. until midnight, there will be speeches and entertainment.

Coors Ads Stir Outcry, Threats

Union Boycott Ended in 1987; Brewer Gives Funds to Charities

by Jay Newquist

The recent appearance of advertisements for Coors Beer in the gay press, including the Advocate and Bay Area Reporter, has rekindled long-simmering hostilities about the brewing giant.

For years, Coors Beer has been the target of a boycott because of a bitter labor dispute in 1976 at its plant. That dispute involved complicated charges of union-busting, discrimination in hiring minorities and gays, and the notorious rightwing politics of William and Joseph Coors.

But new management at Coors has sought to change the company's practices and image. The AFLCIO called off its boycott in August 1987, and the Teamsters are now organizing brewery workers.

The company has also become a regular contributor to gay events and charities. Nationally known Boston City Councilman David Scondras, one of the most progressive voices in gay politics, recently accepted a $25,000 donation from Coors, through its New England distributor, for Boston-area gay and lesbian charities. Scondras said he was joining with organized labor "to announce settlement of the Coors boycott."

But not everyone is ready to accept that settlement. A group calling itself the Never Again Silent Army spray-painted the slogans "Coorse Fascism" and "Coors for Queers" on the side of B.A.R. offices two weeks ago.

This week, a broken bottle of Coors was left on the B.A.R.'s doorstep with an accompanying, threatening note.

The Harvey Milk Lesbian and Gay Democratic Club also has asked the B.A.R. to refuse to accept Coors advertising and "not to break ranks now" in support of the Coors boycott.

"Although Coors may have settled some of its labor questions, the company has not in any way dealt with questions of racism and homophobia," read the Milk Club letter to the B.A.R.

This heated reaction came as a surprise to Richard Evans, a member of the board of directors for the Denver-based Gay and Lesbian Community Center of Colorado. Evans has been working with Coors over the past few years.

"There was once a bad feeling about the brewery here and what they represented politically. But in the last few years, Coors has made inroads in the gay and lesbian community," he said.

Evans reported that Coors had recently given $10,000 to the All Walks of Life Walkathon in San Diego that raised $250,000 to fight AIDS. He said Coors also gave $10,000 to fund a B.B. King concert in Maine whose proceeds also went to fight AIDS.

The Gay Rodeo in Denver also accepted money from Coors, Evans said.

The helm of the Adolph Coors Co. has recently passed from William and Joseph Coors to their sons Peter and Jeff Coors, according to Evans. With the change in leadership has come a change of policy, away from right-wing and homophobic labels.

Evans did not underestimate the ugliness and rancor of the old Coors as a buster of the union, the Coors that used scab labor, and the Coors that garnered the enmity of gay people and ethnic minorities for their former hiring policies.

He recalled that the Coors boycott movement began in San Francisco in 1976 when the late Harvey Milk agreed to keep the agitation against Coors alive in exchange for labor support for Milk's candidacy for supervisor.

The boycott may exist in some pockets of Denver's gay community, according to Evans, but it is unorganized and rather apathetic except for a few "militants."

"[Militants] have greatest resistance," he said. "They stiffen up right away when the name Coors is mentioned.

"The feeling is we'll take Coors' money. The boycott was successful, because it has let Coors know how powerful the gay and lesbian community is here," Evans said.

Evans didn't feel that Coors' porate relations for the brewery, said Coors had made a concerted effort since 1982 to mend its fences.

"Quite frankly, we've done a accept Coors advertising, Evans said. "Coors is here. Very few events happen in Colorado where Coors doesn't have a presence."

Bay Area Reporter publisher Bob Ross said he would continue to accept Coors advertising because there was no longer an organized boycott and because Coors has become more responsive to the gay and lesbian community by giving money, especially to AIDS-related causes.

"Writing letters is a more re-

than trashing properties," said Ross. "The profits from Coors ads are pumped right back into the gay community."

John Meadows, director of cor-

"Some people are more inclined to let the past die," Meadows said, expressing regret about the backlash against the B.A.R.

He added that bad word of mouth had been difficult to overcome, but that fortunes had reversed, and now Coors is sold in 29 of the 31 gay bars in Colorado.

"The only real measure of success is sales, and we're quite competitive," he said.

There has been no union boycott of Coors since August 1987, when a negotiated settlement was made with the AFL-CIO.

Meadows reported that organizing efforts were under way by the National Labor Relations Board in connection with the Teamsters to unionize Coors brewery employees. ▼

AIDS Vigilers Celebrate Their Third Anniversary

Still Waiting for Federal Action on AIDS Crisis

by Dennis McMillan

The ARC/AIDS Vigil celebrated its third anniversary Thursday, Oct. 27, at the makeshift campsite on United Nations Plaza. Approximately 80 people wearing the familiar green ribbon and chain on their lapels braved the chilly October wind to commemorate the vigil.

Harry Britt spoke at the AIDS Vigil's third anniversary.

Handwritten signs either criticized the government or applauded the vigil supporters, saying, "1,095 days: time isn't the only thing the FDA is killing," and "Thank you for three years of support."

Freedom Song Network, eight people with acoustic guitars and an accordion, many of whom sang at the very first day of the vigil, offered various encouraging songs, assuring that "we shall not be moved."

Supervisor Harry Britt spoke out in support of the vigil and reminded the audience of the upcoming tenth anniversary of the murder of the community's first gay supervisor, Harvey Milk. "Harvey's message to us was that we had to get over the idea that if we were just good little boys and girls, the world would learn to take care of us gay men and lesbians."

Britt commended the vigil for its Milk-inspired action three years ago in chaining themselves to the old Federal Building as an act of protest against federal inaction and neglect. He urged the community to draw even closer together and participate in whatever civil disobedience may be required to force the government to truly get involved with the epidemic

Senator Milton Marks also put in an appearance to show his support of the vigil.

Dr. Kevin Grumbach, family practitioner at San Francisco General Hospital, discussed the concept of "family." He lamented that "the George Bushes of this world have cornered the market on the definition of family." He went on to define a family, in his opinion, as "people who are bonded together by a sense of love, trust, and commitment to each other's wishes."

In short, he applauded the gay community as a true family.

Grumbach criticized the U.S. as the only industrialized nation in the world, with the exception of South Africa, that does not have some form of universal health care for its citizens.

Ellen Shaffer of the Community Health Coalition sent a congratulatory letter, which was read by a charter member of the original AIDS Vigil, Steve Russell.

AIDS activist John Belskus gave a brief history of the vigil and its struggle to exist. "Compassion and determination is what the ARCIAIDS Vigil is all about," he said.

Harvey Maurer, secretary of the vigil and member for almost all three years, documented the number of visitors staying overnight or longer at the vigil site as close to 5,000 people. "Over 200 now are dead, but not forgotten. They show us just how extensive our community really is," he said.

ACT UP member Terry Beswick offered solidarity from his group to the vigil members. Beswick anticipated the day when the vigil will be over and the work will have been accomplished.

Hank Tavera of the Third World AIDS Advisory Task Force and client services director at the San Francisco AIDS Foundation had just returned from an international symposium on AIDS education and communication in Mexico. He brought the symposium's wholehearted congratulations to the vigil as a "symbol of protest and hope to all in the battle trenches in the war against AIDS."

Garth, an original vigil member, told the B.A.R. that the site has served as an ARC/AIDS information center to the tourists in the city. "People come by and see our literature where they may not have gotten it anywhere else," he said.

He assured any would-be critics of the vigil that the tents would remain until the ARC/AIDS Vigil's Four Moral Appeals were met by the government.

The weatherbeaten sign at the vigil campsite enumerated these appeals:

"1. Federal research funding of $900,000,000 this year to find a cure for AIDS and ARC, to come from existing social programs. This amounts to one hour of government spending.

"2. Federal recognition of AIDS-related complex as a critical dimension of the AIDS crisis affecting vast numbers of Americans. We call for proper funding for medical care and support for people with ARC, including such services as Medicare, Medi-Cal, and Social Security disability insurance.

"3. The FDA must immediately allow American physicians to prescribe medicines and treatment for AIDS and ARC available to their colleagues in other countries.

"4. We appeal to Pres. Reagan and government officials at all levels to publicly condemn AIDS-related discrimination against current risk groups and to repudiate incitements, fear, and hatred which exploit this tragic epidemic."

Britt to Celebrate At Victory Party

The victory party for Sup. Harry Britt will be presented Tuesday night, Nov. 8, in the Grand Ballroom of the San Franciscan Hotel. The free party will begin as the polls close at 8 p.m. and continue on through the evening.

Election returns for many issues on the ballot will be posted throughout the evening. The information will be obtained through a special office being set up in the hotel with direct communication to City Hall and other voter reporting sites. This will be supplemented by a series of television sets which will be installed for the event.

The event will be a celebration as many expect Britt to become the first openly gay person ever elected president of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors.

The San Franciscan Hotel is located at the corner of 8th and Market Streets and is directly in front of Muni Metro and BART stations. Britt campaign officials stated the party is free and encouraged everyone to attend.

Church Conf. Blesses Same-Sex Marriages

But No Change in Episcopal Doctrine

by Jay Newquist

A vote to support the blessing of gay and lesbian relationships by the Episcopal Church in Northern California was seen by some as a small step forward in social change. But there are giant steps left to take, they say.

At its annual diocesan convention that just concluded at Grace Cathedral, delegates in the Episcopal Diocese of California voted 189 to 147 to endorse liturgies that recognize support for same-sex unions.

The practice of such a policy would allow priests to bless gay and lesbian unions in the eyes of the church. The service would be similar to heterosexual marriages.

There are Episcopal priests in San Francisco who have been privately blessing gay couples who commit themselves to one another. But it has heretofore been forbidden by the public policy of the church to approve such unions.

What is the chance that the Diocese of California resolution to bless gay and lesbian unions will ever be placed into official practice?

Slim, at best. The Episcopal Church may be more liberal than others, but there are limits. The term "marriage" in the Episcopal sense still remains the heterosexual standard. Episcopalians in the U.S. remain in the vanguard of social change, but the American Church frowns on the sanctions of same-sex unions as do Anglicans as a whole.

Bishop William Swing has said many times that he will not go up against national church policy on this issue. The diocesan resolution for same-sex unions typifies the struggle for gays and lesbians within the Episcopal Church who are warmly received into the faith, but who remain disenfranchised in this key area.

The pressure to bless gay and lesbian marriages in San Francisco is considerable, said Swing, who opposes the resolution. He stated that the church's blessing still must be withheld from same-sex couples.

All Episcopal priests are obliged to tow the line and support church doctrine. There is every reason to believe such a policy will continue locally and worldwide until the movement reaches the church hierarchy.

Gay marriages may be more popular on a national scale than commonly assumed, according to Partners, the Seattle-based newsletter for lesbian and gay couples.

In preliminary results of 136 out of 700 questionnaires in a survey, Partners reported that 12 percent of respondents indicated they had formalized their relationship with a ceremony. Another four percent said they planned to do so.

Another 12 percent celebrated anniversaries while 43 percent replied they wore rings or other symbols to symbolize their relationship.

"The data we collect and interpret will help social service providers and civil rights advocates to strengthen and support the families of lesbians and gay men," said the survey publisher.

Remembering

Grace Cathedral was the scene Saturday for the Day of Remembrance. Throughout the day, people gathered to recall friends and lovers who have died of AIDS. Photos and panels of the Names Quilt were displayed while music was performed, poetry read, and healing services conducted by a number of groups.

upervisor Harry Britt is practically a household name in this town. He has fought for many issues in many areas. Britt will undoubtedly be reelected because he speaks for many San Franciscans. But we urge you to be sure to vote for Harry, not just because he is one of ours, but because he stands a good chance of becoming president of the Board of Supervisors for the next two years.

It is now law that the top vote-getter is named to head the board, and Britt seems headed for that honor. That means he will be assigning other supervisors to committees and will have enormous influence over the agenda for the entire board. With a pro-gay mayor in office with whom Britt has an excellent working relationship, this could translate into legislative gains for the gay and lesbian community.

Harry Britt has worked hard for our community. He continues the tradition of Harvey Milk, who he was appointed to succeed, of using political office as a means of instructing society at large about gay people and gay concerns. He has spearheaded the battle for civil rights and for funding this city's model AIDS care programs. He almost got to take our cause to Congress.

Harry has been at the cutting edge of issues from gay rights to environmental protections. He deserves your vote for supervisor. ▼

or over ten years, Jim Gonzalez has worked tirelessly against homophobic candidates and state propositions like the LaRouche, Briggs, and now Dannemeyer initiatives. Of late, he has been instrumental in keeping the Latino AIDS Training Center going. He has long supported and participated in AIDS workshops that gathered information to the control of mation about minority AIDS problems. He is no stranger to hard work

He is also concerned about neighborhood problems and the drug abuses of some of our poorer areas here in San Francisco. Of great concern to him are allegations into police brutality. His office is always open to all citizens of this city. While working as an aide to Assemblyman Art Agnos and later for Dianne Feinstein, he was always available to us for questions and, most importantly, answers

He has consistently supported gay and lesbian candidates. He has earned our support. When it comes to bottom lines, Jim has been supportive of most of our issues. We are pleased and proud to endorse his candidacy for the board.

Tom Hsieh

om Hsieh has made a couple of blunders as a freshman supervisor, but we believe he has learned from his mistakes. He has been working to help trim back city expenses while opposing cuts in sential services; i.e., fire and police services. His main concern is to try to help small businesses to survive and is trying to show that the city is concerned about them. By encouraging new businesses, he is also encouraging new jobs.

His is an admirable success story. He emigrated to the U.S. from China in 1952 and learned English while working his way through the University of California. He has two degrees in architecture and runs his own successful busine

He served the city well as a police commissioner, as well as a public utilities commissioner. He was appointed to take Louise Renne's place on the board. We believe he should be given his own term and heartily

Supervisor Silver is well acquainted with the workings of the board and of city government. And she knows our community well. She has been a reliable ally for years on issues of concern to us. We may not always agree with Sup. Silver, but we find her hard-working, honest, and forthright in her service on the board

She has also served on other public boards, such as the Golden Gate Bridge District, where she has also been an ally. Supervisor Silver has said she hopes to continue to solve the city's problems with compassion and not conflict. She has demonstrated that over the years, ever since the night she stood on the City Hall steps and tried to prevent violence after Harvey Milk's assassin got off lightly.

For her experience and her demonstrated commitment to our cause, vote for Carol Ruth Silver for supervisor.

ruce Lilienthal is another candidate who has put a lot of credibility into the gay community. From the very beginning of his race, he has been actively campaigning in our community. He has everal gay and lesbian members on his staff. He is an attorney who has law partners who are openly gay, and he works quite well with them.

Bruce has been very active for a number of years in the small business community. He is a former president of the Council of District Merchants. He was in the vanguard in the fight for a small business advisory commission and was its president until a few months ago. We believe he will continue to be concerned about small businesses and our neighborhoods. We urge a yes vote for Bruce Lilienthal.

* Please don't be deceived by the big, expensive billboards and newspaper ads paid for by greedy property owners denouncing Prop. U. They practice the art of deception well with the money they've ripped off from you over the years. You need U. We all need U.

Think about it logically. If Prop. U would raise rents, as these ads say, why would every established grassroots tenants association in San Francisco be supporting it? Better yet, why would landlords object to raising your rent? And if they could use so-called "pass-throughs" to cover the costs of improvements, don't you think they'd be doing so now?

Think about five years back. Rents have literally doubled in San Francisco. Many of our friends and neighbors have had to move elsewhere or join communal households out of financial necessity. Since property owners are limited to a 4 percent annual increase for occupied apartments, they have used the "vacancy loophole" to increase rents on empty units to all-time highs. The simple truth is that Prop. U is designed to extend existent rent control to vacant units. That's all. Read it. It's the shortest city proposition on the ballot. osition on the ballot.

The sponsors of Prop. U cannot afford full-page ads or big, flashy street signs, but they have worked diligently for fairness to this city's tenants for many years. By voting for this proposition, you can help ensure that San Francisco will not continue to be-come a city where only the wealthy can afford to live.

Please help stop the greed. Give U your vote.

A Vote for Pat

* Unfortunately, the mentality of middle America that elected Ronald Ray-Gun may very well give us another birdbrain for president, with a third bird just a heartbeat away. But here in San Francisco, we have the opportunity to send a message of hope to lesbians and gay brothers throughout the country and to make a statement to the rest of America.

The last time Pat Norman ran for supervisor, some-The last time Pat Norman ran for supervisor, someone came up with the idea to vote only for her, which would ensure her election and also give her the chance to be board president, as well. Let the incumbents stand on their record and the lesser-known candidates take their chances for having remained safely in the background while Pat Norman was out in front, placing herself at risk to speak out against not only injustice to other lesbians and gays, women, and other minorities, but to mankind in general.

I'm proud to have met Pat Norman, and Pd be very happy to address her as "Sup. Pat," although "Pres. Pat" has a nicer ring to it. So save yourself some time in the voting booth and please join me in doing yourself and San Francisco a giant favor. Vote only for Pat Norman for S.F. Board of Supervisors!

For Two-Term Limit

* Proposition O, the two-term limit for the Board of Supervisors, is a much-needed reform whose time has come. If the two-term limit is appropriate for the president and the mayor, why, then, not for the Board of Supervisors? Anyone who favors fairness and openness in government should vote yes on O.

The two-term limit was placed on the ballot by 30,000 San Francisco voters who believe that the current Board of Supervisors has become insular, stale, and burned out. They recognize that without a two-term limit, the situation won't be remedied. It has become a fact of political life that, without term limitations, incumbents will almost always win re-

Proposition O would do the following:

I. Supervisorial elections would be moved to odd years. Currently it is very difficult for challengers to raise monies when they must compete with national and state races and state propositions. This gives an unfair advantage to incumbents. Furthermore, doesn't it make sense to elect our supervisors the same years that we elect our mayor, district attorney, city attorney, and treasurer?

The opponents of Prop. O have raised the spectre that odd-year elections militate against minorities because of lower turnout. The fact is that turnout during the 1971 mayoral/supervisorial election was only 10,000 less than the turnout in 1980 and roughly 20,000 greater than the turnout in 1982 and 1986.

2. Those incumbents who have been elected to two or more four-year terms would have to retire at the end of 1989. Under Prop. O, however, they are allowed to run as nonincumbents in 1995.

Their seats would be vacated, and seven new faces would be elected to the board in the fall of 1989. From a gay perspective, clearly Tim Wolfred, who will have been elected three times to the Community College Board, and Pat Norman, who has run three strong challenges for the Board of Supervisors, would have an excellent chance of being elected to the board under these circumstances. They have no chance under the current system

The choice is clearly one of good government. It should be noted that leading the charge against Prop. O is Speaker Willie Brown, and we all know what an "asset" he has been to good government over the years. Don't let Willie Brown and the $200,000 he has thrown into the No on Prop. O campaign cloud the issue. Vote yes on Prop. O!

Save the Library

Please don't junk the San Francisco Public

Although three decades of neglect and abuse have Although three decades of neglect and abuse have left the library building musty and murky, no study has yet been made of completing the original plans for the building to double its capacity by covering its full block. Since 1957, four background reports have presumed that a new building must be preferable to the old. That's all—no floor plans of the additions with adaptations of general feeters and each to see the control of the contro to the out. That salm—in not plans of the adul-tion with calculations of square footage and cost, no drawings of the renovation with the various function-al problems resolved. Just a couple of background sentences predicated on the assumption that the library "deserves" a modern structure on Marshall Square.

I've read all the library studies, and never do they actually design a basic spatial layout of the SFPL expanded to its full site. No one has tried to solve the architectural questions of how such an expansion might be carried out.

Meanwhile, however, hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent on consultants' reports on an entirely new structure and extensive architectural drawings of the existing library building gutted and converted into such disparate possibilities as a courthouse, a museum, a theater complex, an office building, and commercial space. Not a single drawing of how it might be used as a library of twice its present capacity, as its origial architect intended.

Former San Francisco Chief Librarian John C. Frantz has written, "I believe a large, 'architecturally imposing,' new main library in Marshall Square is a serious step in the wrong direction. Restoration and maximum use of the present library, plus a modern addition wing using the entire present site, seems clearly the alternative in the best long-range interests of all San Franciscans who use their library."

I ask you to join me in voting no on Prop. A and reject the abandonment of our magnificent library. Let's hire the best architects to study the expansion plans of the Kelham building. It shocks me that such studies have never been done

Screaming In Print

* This year I'm putting a lot of work into dealing with the volume of information presented by candidates for office and proponents and opponents of various issues. I've developed some suggestions on how to make voting decisions. They may, on first reading, sound frivolous, but thought through, they make a great deal of sense to me. make a great deal of sense to me.

1. On ballot propositions at any level, if you don't understand it, vote no. Do not, not vote: it's important to let initiative proponents and legislators know that you actively disapprove of what they've presented, not that you don't care. If there's a good idea buried in all the words, let the writers prove it next time out, by writing it in simple English.

next time out, by writing it in simple English.

2. If you think you understand a proposition but aren't sure, see who's written the supporting and opposing arguments and decide whether those writers are apt to be on the same side of the question you are. If neither set of writers seems to be in your cor-

3. If the ballot arguments use a lot of capital letters, underlining, italics, consider this "screaming" in print. If you don't like being screamed at, vote no.

4. If you don't know that incumbents have been doing a good job, vote for challengers and throw the rascals out. If you like what incumbents have been doing, vote for them.

5. Vote. Too many people don't bother because they don't like any of the candidates or because they don't understand the issues. There's a school of thought that says voting only encourages politicians, but I haven't seen them disappear as fewer and fewer people vote.

What I think is happening is that less-well-qualified candidates have come to dominate the ballots. Ask a voting official how to do a write-in ballot and write in "none of the above" for any office where you consider no candidate qualified. It's more work, but it may eventually get the point across.

6. Next year, run for office, or support a movement to allow people who want to vote to accept proxies for people who don't want to be bothered. I'll be more than happy to vote on your behalf.

Turnout Critical

★ I wanted you to know that I very much appreciated B.A.R.'s endorsement of Mike Dukakis. I do detect some significant motion toward Dukakis. Only the coming days will tell whether it will be enough to make this a very close race where turnout will be critical. If the race becomes closer, I am convinced that the gay and lesbian turnout in California will be critical and may well elect the next President.

Vincent P. McCarthy Boston, MA

Not Municipalization

★ There is a major mis-statement in your Oct. 27 editorial endorsements list, concerning Prop. Z (Hetch-Hetchy Power Rights). Prop. Z emphatically does not imply municipalization of PG&E's distribution facilities.

Prop. Z directs City Hall to fully implement our right to Hetch-Hetchy electricity as provided for by the Raker Act (which authorized the dam). In 1940 the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that "Congress clearly intended to require...sale and distribution of Hetch Hetchy power... directly to consumers, in the belief that consumers would be afforded power at cheap rates, in competition with private power companies."

The 1973 San Francisco civil grand jury concluded that the city was still violating the Raker Act requirement that cheap power be "sold by the city directly to its inhabitants" and that "The time has now come to bring our power home . . . This is not a case of the city acquiring power rights. We have had them for two generations. It is time that the citizens should realize the full benefits of this enormous resource of energy which we own.'

Municipalization of PG&E, by the way, would not be such a bad idea. Your statement that it would result in higher rates defies reality. San Franciscans now pay the fifth-highest utility rate in the nation. Over 90 percent of the utility companies in the U.S. are publicly-owned utilities charge about 30 percent less than privately-owned companies.

But there are some good arguments against

But there are some good arguments against unicipalization. One is that Hetch-Hetchy doesn't municipalization. One is that fretch-fretchy doesn't produce nearly enough power for all the city's needs, so we would still end up buying most of our power, mostly from PC&E. Another is that monopoly produces inefficiency (whether publicly or privately-owned); even Russia now is realizing the benefits of competition. Third, it would cost a fortune, since PC&E's notificed influence agents that they would PG&E's political influence assures that they would receive an inflated price.

Fourth, it just isn't necessary. Since we don't have enough power to supply the entire city anyway, we can simply offer the power to hospitals and others most deserving of cheap power (we already do this for city-owned facilities and can easily expand).

Regarding the $28 million current profit that PG&E and City Hall are bragging about, nobody has in any way challenged the official estimate of Board of supervisors budget analyst Harvey Rose that this is $53 million per year less than we should be making. The arithmetic is simple.

PG&E doesn't want competition, so they're spending a fortune to oppose Prop. Z (at last report, PG&E was providing 99.93 percent of the No-on-Z funding). But Supervisors Hongisto, Britt and Silver had very good reasons to oppose this giveaway, and passage of Prop. Z will give them the support they deserve

No More Blank Checks

★ I supported Art Agnos for mayor of San Francis-co. I still believe he was the best candidate for the job, but I have some growing concerns.

I acted as one of last year's co-chairs for the Les-bian/Gay Freedom Day Parade and Celebration and was the primary contact with his office for his par-ticipation. We let Art's office hype his relationship with the lesbian and gay community by using it as a media hype which brought him front page coverage in the local papers. Yet besides a fabulous relation-ship with David Custead, Art Agnos, Scott Schaffer and the rest of his office treated us as if the event was being organized around Art's participation and as an entity to get money out of to help deal with the city's deficit

His office wanted control of the lineup of the His office wanted control of the lineup of the parade for media purposes and we held up finalizing the speakers list until Art decided that it was more important to throw a party that day than it was for him to come to our celebration and to talk to us. When he was late in arriving to the parade, Scott Schaffer threw a fit because we were not pleased at the idea of holding back over a quarter of a million people because Art couldn't get there on time.

Relations with every community organization are not going to go smooth, but I'm beginning to think that this kind of relationship with the mayor's office is becoming more of a trend than an isolated situation. We have lost representation in City Hall via Art's appointments, we have seen it take longer for Art to respond to our grass-roots organizations, his office was in support of an injunction against ACT UP! for protesting Lorimar Studios depiction of a bisexual man who purposely spreads terror and the AIDS virus to his sex partners and he has refused to endorse one of our primary movement leaders, Pat Norman for Supervisor. Yet, he was willing to pay for a full page ad in the Sentinel for Terrance Hallinan who is probably Pat's primary competition for the open seat on the board

Art's talk came out strong in support of our movement when he was campaigning and immediately after getting in office, but I'm not seeing that translate into reality, in fact it seems it is almost bordering on the opposite. For the first time I am rejecting and encouraging all of us to reject his advice and not vote for Terrance Hallinan. Every vote for one of Pat's contenders is a vote against her in a race that's as close as this one is.

Art told us once in an interview with our media that we must learn to play hard ball. Well Art, I agree with you and part of that hard ball game means no more blank checks of support for you. You earned our support and you can unearn it.

Pat Norman is needed on the Board of Supervisors not only for our community, but for the good of continuing the strong progressive leadership which San Francisco has always represented. We need leaders who will be there with us doing the work which needs to be done, not just those who have resources that they can lend to our campaigns.

No thank you Art, I'm not going to vote for Terrance Hallinan, he might be a viable candidate but unless we get enough votes for Pat Norman and Harry Britt—and only Pat and Harry—this community may end up with no representation in City Hall. We have serious threats ahead of us with Props. 102 and 96, and there will be more of the same yet to come. Remember Terrance Hallinan campaigned against Harvey Milk in the past and we have no assurances he's going to support us in the future.

Health For Profit

* The lesbian and gay community should vote yes on Prop. Q, the Community Health Care Planning Ordinance, placed on the ballot by initiative petition. A coalition of community, health, consumer and labor organizations is supporting this measure because it would bring important decisions about private-sector health-eare services and deliwery under public scrutiny. Now hospital MBAs wield an axe and eliminate critical health services based on their low profit return. When patients or the community protest, the bureaucrats' answer is: go to General Hospital. But as our community knows this city and county-owned facility is overwhelmed already.

Prop. Q would compel private San Francisco

Prop. Q would compel private San Francisco hospitals to give 90-day notice to the city Health Commission when a department, service or hospital is closed or merged. This three-month period would allow health care workers, patients and activists time to find ways to keep these health care services and facilities open and available to the public.

A case in point occurred recently at PPMC. In mid-June the hospital's Women's Health Clinic, serving moderate and low-income women (most of whom had no primary physician) was precipitously closed because it wasn't bringing enough profit to the already richly endowed hospital. It was not coincidence that this happened shortly after PPMC's lavishly appointed Birthing Center (complete with jacuzzi) opened.

PPMC is pursuing actively a program of shedding services catering to middle and low-income San Franciscans in favor of services that bring in private-paying or privately-insured patients. This policy has ominous implications for our community, Operation Concern and Visiting Nurses and Hospice are both controlled by PPMC.

controlled by PPMC.

This maximization of profit is true of almost all private hospitals in San Francisco with the exception of Chinese and St. Luke's. There is vicious competition among these hospitals for money to expand their medical empires in a classic survival-of-the-richest scenario. To the cutthroat financial managers making decisions in hospitals today, workers, services and patients are secondary—and even expendable—to their pursuit of high profits from our illness.

We already plan health care delivery in the pub-

We already plan health care delivery in the public sector through the Department of Public Health and the Health Commission. Since health care is a right and a vital community concern, public oversight and co-ordination should be extended to all private health care facilities. We should be making health care policy—not uncaring hospitals. Vote yes on Prop. Q!

Walk to the Polls Or Run For Your Life

★ What would it take to inspire every gay Californian to take the few precious moments to vote?

It's the one civic exercise we all share with absolute equality. My vote will cancel Congressman Dannemeyer's, but who will neutralize Paul Gann's, Senator Doolittle's, Sheriff Block's and all the other priggish politicians?

Like it or not, for the fourth and fifth time antigay propositions are on our ballot (Numbers 6, 64, 69, now 96 and 102). When will it stop? After we stop. After we stop fighting back each and every time they try these public referendums to isolate us.

Walking to your polling place now is easier than running for your life later.

Undoubtably gay rights will remain a vanguard issue throughout the century. Let's make our last vote of the decade show our clear determination for justice in the Gay 90s.

GOP Members Rap Gov.

The following was sent to Gov. George Deukmejian:

★ As Republican officeholders, candidates, party leaders, and major contributors from Bay Area counties severely affected by the AIDS epidemic and its human suffering and financial burdens, we strongly urge you to reverse your position on Prop. 102.

Prop. 2 is "Bad Medicine" and is opposed by the vast majority of your senior medical advisors, the California Medical Association, California Nursea Association, California Association of Hospitals and Health Systems, Health Officers Association of California, American Red Cross, and Association for AIDS Research.

The Dannemeyer Initiative is a step back, not a step forward in combatting this terrible epidemic. It would discourage testing, impede research, and create a witch-hunt. It would cost more lives than it would save.

You have signed into law legislation authored or co-authored by members of both parties dealing with AIDS testing, confidentiality, and research to find a vaccine, treatment or cure for AIDS. Prop. 102 would repeal current state law which allows for voluntary anonymous testing and protects against insurance companies and employers using the AIDS antibody test to discriminate. The Dannemeyer Initiative, by requiring physicians and health officials to report anyone even suspected of being infected with the AIDS virus as well as their sexual or needlesharing partners opens the door for abuses and witch-hunts—wasting hundreds of millions of our tax monies.

The elimination of protections against discrimination and the potential for witch-hunts will drive people at-risk from seeking testing or participating in AIDS research. Those not tested could further spread the disease and many lives will be lost by the slowing of needed research.

We again urge you to join us in opposition to Proposition 102 and keeping California's AIDS response on track.

Helps Demagogues

The following letter was sent to Gov. George Deukmejian:

* As governor of the state of California, you were elected to lead this state in times of crisis. This is one such time, and you are leading the citizens of this state into ignorance and fear. In urging support of Prop. 102, an ill conceived proposition, you encourage people to believe they have something to fear from people with AIDS/ARC and HIV. You know better.

By supporting Prop. 102, you are urging people to fear people with AIDS/ARC/HIV. Unsupported fear can only lead to discrimination aimed at these people, now apparently sanctioned by their elected leaders. People with AIDS/ARC/HIV are already literally fighting for their lives, every day of their lives. Now you aid single minded demagogues in causing these courageous men, women and children to fear even those they must trust most, their health care providers. How can you be so unfeeling and callous? How can any thinking person allow this to happen?

can any thinking person anow this to happen:
California leads this country in responsible AIDS legislation, allowing those at risk to seek anonymous, confidential testing, and then pursue treatment.
AIDS education in the state is arguably the best in the nation as well. We are doing the best job in America in fighting this disease, treating with love and compassion those who are living with AIDS, and fighting with all they have.

By supporting Prop. 102, you know with certainty this care will end. No one with any concern for their job or health insurance will ever again use any test site, or any other AIDS community organization, much less seek medical assistance at the risk of forced registration as a carrier of AIDS. You will assist in destroying all these important organizations by your support of Prop. 102, and I appeal to your sense of human dignity to reverse your decision before Nov. 8.

Lead Californians in the foremost AIDS care in America, reverse your support of Prop. 102 which will surely destroy all we have accomplished in our war against AIDS. This is a war against AIDS, not a war against each other.

All Roads Led to Monsieur

(In Part One, we learned that Philippe, Duc d'Orleans, the younger brother of King Louis XIV, was a "notorious" homosexual who had two wives, 11 legitimate children, and—most importantly—a succession of beautiful lovers. One of these was the Chevalier de Lorraine.)

he King's attitude toward the Chevalier de Lorraine was typical of his attitude toward "sodomites" and "sodomy" in general, claim biographers Mitford and Prince Michael. Practical considerations out-weighed moral ones. Although he "encouraged Monsieur's descent into the hell of homosexuality" [Michael], he would have preferred to put an end to sodomy, "a vice he was known to abhor and which was punishable by the stake." [Mitford].

Continues Mitford, "Several times during his reign, he was on the verge of taking steps against it; but his advisors seem to have pointed out that it would be difficult to do, since in that matter all roads led to Monsieur. Indeed, the little man...provided won-derful protection for others of his sort."

Conclude the Durants in a passage which illustrates their own sage which injustrates their own attitude toward the subject, "It was an age of strict manners and loose morals... Private morals included the usual abberations. In law, homosexuality was punishable with death. A nation pre-paring for war and paying for babies could not let its sexual instincts be diverted from reproduction. But it was difficult to pursue such deviates when the King's own brother was a noted

ronically, this "beribboned, begemmed" little man was also a military hero whose exploits, when he was given the opportunity, rivaled those of his more illustrious brother.

Claims Mitford (with condescension equalling that of Louis himself), Monsieur "would arrive rather late on the field, having got himself up to kill...He would never wear a hat for fear of flattening his wig. Once in action, he was as brave as a lion, only might do to his complexion; and he proved an excellent strate-gist."

Agrees Prince Michael, Monsieur may have been "simpering," "frivolous," and "brainless," but he was also the acknowledged hero of the battle of Cassel (1677). This, combined with his "affability, easy manner, and vitality" made him "more popular at the court and in Paris than [Louis]," a fact which Louis resented.

For well over 50 years, Mon-sieur led a charmed, if frivolous, existence. Surprisingly, however, at the end of his life he underwent something of a spiritual rebirth, according to Lewis. His confessor, Father Trevoux, told was old, fat, short-necked, worn out with debauchery, and would probably die of apoplexy in the near future.

'Frightened out of his wits. Monsieur abandoned his favor-ites, turned to his wife for consolation, and everyone in the house enjoyed the benefits of his tardy conversion—he even talked less than usual: that is to say, as much as three or four women talking at s it happened, Monsieur's conversion was short-lived. As predicted, in 1701 he As predicted, in 1701 he did die of apoplexy after furiously upbraiding the King for failing to recognize the merits of Monsieur's son, the Duc de Chartres. Like his father, the young duke was a notorious and debauched reprobate, yet his talents and promise far surpassed those of the King's own progeny.

The King was understandably jealous, especially since, according to contemporary accounts related by J.H. Sherman in Philippe, Duke of Orleans (1979), this was a young man who "owed his very existence to his mother's masculine appearance."

In the end, it was Monsieur who had the last laugh, for it was his son, and not the King's, who ruled France as regent through-out the lengthy minority of Louis out the lengthy minority of Dous XV, Louis' great-grandson. And it was Monsieur, not Louis, who (with the help of his formidable Teutonic second wife) became known as "the grandfather of Europe."

Notes Prince Michael, "All the royal families of Europe would one day descend from the union of this effeminate man and this discrimination by agencies on the basis of sexual orientation remains in effect.

He reiterated that $1.3 million ent into the first United Way went into the first United Way AIDS Crisis Fund for education and direct services for people with AIDS. A shortfall in fund-raising due to the affirmative action policy would have reduced the money directed at gay and lesbian services, he said.

Major UW recipients in 1987 were the San Francisco AIDS Foundation ($445,000), Shanti ($445,000), and the AIDS Emergency Fund ($21,000). Others such as Operation Concern and Community United Against Violence (CUAV) have also been recipients of UW funds.

Stafford conceded that the lesser of two evils was the hasty exit of the policy. But gay donors may now contribute less.

"We have no idea what we're getting from gay donors," Stafford said, "because so much money comes from pledges on payroll deduction cards. We don't really know who's who."

Stafford said there were a few instances where gay donors contacted UW to suspend their pledges based on the shelved affirmative action policy. He wondered, however, how the cent publicity might affect other gay donors who could withhold their money without contacting UW.

The affirmative action policy was suggested by a gay and lesbian task force at UW. The panel withdrew it when straight donors reacted with hostility that member agencies would have to hire gays and lesbian members.

Roberta Achtenberg, co-chair of the task force, said recently that the group had no choice since gay and lesbian services would suffer.

Achtenberg added, that the battle was lost, but not the war. She thought that the UW would be under more scrutiny by the gay community than ever before.

Despite the policy setback, Stafford said the UW's image was improving in the gay community for the first time.

As part of its 1988 campaign, UW produced a video about the late Tom Waddell that is airing on local TV stations. Stafford said the reaction has been great and a positive impetus for pledging.

Stafford said the UW's goals Stations said the UW sgoals this year was to target minorities, including gays. He said the UW also hoped to create a cash fund for people in emergency as typified by the AIDS Emergency Fund.

The Many Reasons Why I'm Voting For Michael Dukakis for President

by David Scondras, Boston City Councillor

e have spoken out across the country hoping to get the Democratic party leaders to reject the policy of courting Archie Bunker Democrats at the expense of progressives. The party has chosen not to listen.

We argued that many of those who have been historically devalued would stay home if the party did not reach out to them and their concerns.

People of color, gay and lesbian people and progressives made their concerns very clear by supporting Jesse Jackson. This message was heard by many, and is reflected in the Democratic Party platform and rules reform. Our message will continue to be heard as we grow stronger.

Jackson lost the nomination. Dukakis won the nomination. Integrity made us work for Jackson. Now, integrity calls upon us to work for Dukakis.

There are some who feel progressives ought to intentionally stay home to "teach the Democrats a lession." They feel this is a way to get more power. I disagree. But even if this were true, who would pay for the lesson?

I'm sure the hungry and homeless, the sick and the old, those living with AIDS and those who are frightened at the pollution that is killing the seas—those who have suffered in so many ways from the Reagan-Bush policies of the past eight years would wonder why we decided to desert them. I'm sure those who fought for eight years to stem the erosion of progress for people of color under the Reagan-Bush administration would wonder why we decided to leave.

I'm voting for Michael Dukakis because I'm voting for the children whose school lunch was under attack by a presidency that declared ketchup an adequate vegetable.

I'm voting for Dukakis because the children in the towns of northern Nicaragua want an end to a war that has them jumping in and out of trenches to protect themselves from Bush-Reagan sponsored terrorists. I'm voting for Dukakis because children who are dying at the hands of drug dealers need a leader who will dump Noriega, not support him.

I'm voting for Dukakis because people with AIDS need a president who will fight to get new drugs out to people with AIDS, to cut FDA red tape with-out using the AIDS crisis as an excuse to deregulate the drug industry, and who will protect people with AIDS from discrimination—instead of dragging his feet in spending money already allocated by Congress. That man is not George Bush, who sent a letter to gay elected officials focusing on testing as a key response to the AIDS crisis.

We're voting for Dukakis because the oceans that are dying cannot wait four years for Jackson to save them from Bush's commitment to offshore drilling.

We're voting for Dukakis because the homeless who sleep on city hall steps all summer need the federal government to build 200,000 units a year—as they did before Reagam—rather than the 20,000 a year that have been built under Reagan-Bush.

Vote for Dukakis because you do not want to be part of a presidency that offers women the coathanger as their only choice to an unwanted pregnancy, a presidency that would bring back the nightmare we remember.

Vote for Dukakis because he has openly gay men and women in his campaign, because when a gay rights bill passes he will sign

Vote for Michael Dukakis because Ronald Reagan in eight years has appointed more than half of all the judges in the federal courts and you don't want George Bush to appoint the rest.

Vote for Dukakis because the three most liberal members of the Supreme Court are in their 80s; because you do not want to be part of a decision that will shackle the next two generations with a Reagan-Bush court that has already given us Hardwick and is itching to overturn Roe v. Wade.

A Republican Vote ... For Dukakis

by Bruce B. Decker

n 1984, I supported Ronald Reagan over Walter Mondale. I cannot tell you how I would react if faced with that choice today. I can tell you, however, how my experiences in dealing with the Reagan/Bush administration affect my choice between George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

The access afforded me by my longstanding relationships with Republican and Reagan/Bush administration leaders has given me the opportunity to work as an "insider," observing their internal attitudes and working relationships. What I saw dismayed and frustrated me. Often suffering abuse by my gay colleagues, I kept judiciously quiet, recognizing that I have been uniquely positioned as perhaps the only open gay person with even limited access to the administration's highest levels during this critical time.

With the refreshing exceptions of Surgeon Gen. Koop and Presidential Commission Chairman Watkins (both of whom were ignored and ostracized by the administration for having the courage of their convictions), the private response to AIDS has ranged from cynical indifference to cruel malevolence. It has been an indefensible endorsement of the moral equivalent of genocide of gay men in America.

History will be unforgiving, and so should all of America's voters, particularly those who are infected or at risk of HIV infection, and their lovers, families, friends, co-workers, neighbors, and business associates

Common Goals, Common Ground

by Jesse Jackson

here comes a time for every person to make a choice and such a time is upon us now. We have an opportunity in 1988 to change the direction of our nation. By electing a Democratic President, we will end the social and economic violence of the Reagan-Bush Administration and return our nation back to the course that leads to justice and equal opportunity for all

The urgent issues of our day—the abolition of apartheid in South Africa, the cessation of fighting in Central America, the much-needed war on drugs, the ongoing struggle for civil rights, and the battle against AIDS—require a President who can lead and who can act.

I believe that Michael Dukakis will be that President.

There comes a time to find common ground and to form a united front to defeat a common foe. This is such a time. Gov. Dukakis and I share a common commitment to creating a society where the freedom of the individual is respected by all and the diversity of our people is recognized as our greatest strength.

We share a common commitment to eradicating prejudice and bigotry wherever they are found and to protecting the civil rights and dignity of every citizen. We share this common ground with millions of lesbians and gays across this country. It is now clear that this election may well be won or lost by the margin of our collective efforts between now and Nov. 8.

I need not remind you of what eight years under the Reagan-Bush Administration has done to this nation. The Reagan-Bush Administration has refused to accept the fact that AIDS is indeed a public health crisis and has virtually ignored the warnings of the Surgeon General and the Presidential Commission on HIV

Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson debated back in May in San Francisco. (Photo: PhotoGraphics/Darlene)

What a difference compassionate and caring leadership in the White House would have made in the allocation of federal funds to finding a vaccine and cure. What an impact a nationwide AIDS education plan would have had at a time when violence and discrimination against lesbians and gays was escalating due to hysteria and fear.

The record of Michael Dukakis in fighting AIDS is one of the best in the nation. He has demonstrated that he can and will provide leadership in the war against AIDS. Under Gov. Dukakis' leadership, Massachusetts was the first state in the country to do a house-to-house educational mailing about AIDS. Massachusetts has led the nation on many other fronts as well including research, treatment and care services. A Dukakis Administration would lead the battle and that is significant.

In October 1987, you and I stood together to demand civil rights protections for lesbians and gays and to demand a compassionate and timely response to the AIDS crisis. In November 1988, we must find common ground again. I urge each of you to join me to elect a government committed to peace—committed to social justice and compassion for all people.

The quest continues, my friends. We are so far from where we started. In November we must make a choice. We must find strength in unity and power in our diversity. We must find common ground. The election of Michael Dukakis is crucial to achieving our common goals. Keep hope alive.

If passed, it would eliminate anonymous testing for the AIDS virus by requiring those who test positive to be reported to state health officials. It would also require contact-tracing, and anyone even suspected of carrying the virus would be reported.

Last week. Gov. George Deukmejian, apparently squeezed politically by the right wing of his party, buckled to the pressure of Dannemeyer and company and announced that he would vote for the repressive initiative despite the announced

The right-wing fundamentalists are still at it. Rev. Pat Robertson, campaigning for George Bush, last week asked for a $20 monthly pledge from his flock to his political action committee, warning that if Bush is beaten, "America will have to endure a government bureaucracy filled with radical feminists, homosexuals, and other radical left fringe groups."

Meanwhile, Rev. Jerry Fal-well, begging big bucks from his followers, warned them that "Gov. Dukakis believes that homosexuals have a right to be foster parents."

Willie was once again shooting his mouth off in an interview Monday with the New York Times, saying that "by this late stage, people have given up on Dukakis." (Well, at least it sounds like Willie has.)

Brown continued trashing the Dukakis campaign by saying that "when you manage to go from a 17-point lead to an 11-point deficit in a matter of eight short weeks, they're not inclined to buy a lottery ticket from you, never mind electing you president."

Saying that Dukakis was "the wrong kind of candidate for California," Brown continued that the Democratic campaign is in trouble because "it's Dukakis' fault, you can't blame the staff or the advisors. It starts with the head guy. He has to read the situation and decide what tactics to follow."

Suggesting that Dukakis had done very little right in the cam-paign, Brown also asserted that Dukakis had hurt himself by his answer to the very first question of the second presidential debate: If his wife Kitty were raped and killed, would he favor the execution of the killer?

"It was a perfect setup," Brown said. "He should have

Oregon Proposal Legalizes Bias

Ballot Measure to Kill Gov's Order

PORTLAND, OR - Oregon voters face a ballot measure Nov. 8 which would revoke a gubernatorial executive order prohibiting dis-crimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Many also fear it would have national repercussions by encouraging such discrimination.

"What is most frightening about this initiative is that it not only revokes Gov. [Neil] Goldschmidt's executive order, but it also enacts new law inviting discrimination against lesbians and gay men," said Liz Kaufman, campaign manager for Oregon-ians for Fairness, the group form-ed to fight the initiative known as Oregon Ballot Measure 8.

Many believe that passage of Measure 8 will have national repercussions. Congressional Rep Barney Frank (D-MA), comment ing on the issue, recently said, "We've been making progress here in Washington on federal gay rights legislation because we have been able to convince members of Congress that prejudice against gays has diminished among the electorate. Passage of Measure 8 in a state like Oregon would be disastrous becaus the message it would send to Congress."

The order issued by Gold-schmidt in October 1987 bans discrimination in employment and in the provision of services in the executive branch of state government. It specifically excludes any affirmative action based on sexual orientation. It is one of ten such executive orders across the Goldschmidt's order incensed the extreme right wing of Oregon politics, which banded together in an organization called the Ore-gon Citizens Alliance and formed the "No Special Rights Commit-tee." This committee collected

ach and every member of the lesbian and gay and AIDS activist community has a stake in the outcome of the vote on Prop. 102. It is therefore important to take a moment to review the things that have been done to win this critical race.

There is concern in the wake of Gov. George Deukmejian's endorsement of 102 that it may not be possible to win. But I would like to place this single endorsement in the perspective of a com-plete statewide campaign, of plete statewide campaign, of which the governor's announce-ment is only a part.

Californians Against Prop. 102 set out early to build a consensus among statewide opinion leaders that Dannemeyer's legislation is not a responsible approach to the AIDS epidemic. That consensus was nearly complete before Deukmejian's endorsement. A diverse group from Gerald Ford and Pete Wilson to Leo McCar-thy, Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson displayed broad bi-partisan opposition to 102.

The California Chamber of Commerce and 14 major cor-porations, the Catholic Con-ference of Bishops, League of Women Voters, P.T.A. and Califor-nia Labor Federation were among a long list of groups pro-viding depth of opposition that Dannemeyer could not begin to compete with. And the en-dorsements of the California dorsements of the California Medical Association, American Red Cross and every major medical organization in the state backed Dannemeyer into a corner with only the support of California Physicians for a Logical AIDS Response, a near lunatic band of approximately 20 per-

When Gov. Deukmejian an When Gov. Deukmejian announced his position on 102, the press protrayed him as isolated on the issue from virtually every credible statewide group. The press certainly made it clear that he had ignored the advice of his own medical advisers and staff.

To put the governor's position in perspective, it is important to know that when CAP 102 con-

Lecture Explores Political Myths

The Graduate Psychology Program at New College will host a special lecture on the 1988 Presidential Campaign, titled: Campaign '88: America's Allegiance to the Presidency.

The featured speaker will be Dr. Stephen Ducat, Ph.D., author of the critically acclaimed study of the Reagan Presidency, Taken In: American Gullibility and the Reagan Mythos.

Dr. Ducat's presentation will focus on the social and psychological appeal of presidential politics after Ronald Reagan. He will also address the underlying political and psychological messages of presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

This event will take place Sunday, Nov. 6, at 7 p.m. at the New College, Valencia Center, 777 Valencia St., San Francisco, CA.

ducted its first private polling, only 5 percent of voters said they would consider the governor a credible source of information about AIDS, while 62 percent said they would consider the CMA credible.

In the weekend following the governor's announcement, the campaign conducted polling which showed little impact from the governor's position, and statewide pollsters were arguing that the governor's position could backfire by giving oppo-nents of 102 more opportunity to get out our message.

Still, the campaign and his own AIDS panel headed by Dr. Marcus Conant had put a great deal of energy into advising the governor and was shocked not to get his endorsement. His willingness to abandon state AIDS programs he had earlier approved and funded is clearly a prob-lem for the future, whether 102

The campaign has been able to fund nearly $300,000 of radio time in major media markets throughout the state for the last three weeks. And it has funded statewide slate card mailings that will reach 3.5 million Republican households this week recom-mending a NO vote on 102, and 7 million pieces of mail to Democratic households. This direct mail cost the campaign $120,000. mair cost the campaign's expectation that, facing a long and complicated ballot, most voters will take these slate cards to the polls to make voting easier.

In addition to slate mailings. the campaign expects that voters will carry the endorsements of their newspapers to the polls.

CAP 102 has therefore met with or worked with every important paper in the state, and thus far, Dannemeyer has not secured the support of a single one.

Knowing that money for state-wide advertising would be limited, CAP 102 has pursued an aggressive program to conduct press conferences and press events to keep visibility of our position as high as possible. Judging by the free media coverage of other statewide initia-tive campaigns, this effort has tive campaigns, this effort has worked very well. It has certain-ly been largely responsible in the first months of the campaign for moving voters in our direction in

In August, the first California Poll showed us losing 72 percent to 22 percent. By mid October 43 to 22 percent. By mid October 43 percent of voters were prepared to vote yes, 33 percent no, and enough were undecided to swing the election in either direction. On Friday night after the gover-nor's announcement, the campaign conducted private polling which showed a 44 percent yes vote and 41 percent no vote. Every poll which has presented voters with arguments in support and opposition to 102 has found that the Initiative loses by 52 to 65 percent.

We will be working on election day to get voters to the polls who are likely to help defeat 102. We are likely to help deteat 102. We must turn again to the commu-nity for help. magine coming home to find your apartment ransacked and your TV and stereo stolen. A police officer arrives to take a report. He punches your name and social security number into a portable computer to make sure you have no outstanding arrest warrants. Strictlyroutine, he says. You're a little shook up by the burglary, but you know it's not likely the computer will turn up a warrant. You turn to the cop and jokingly say, "At least I have a clean record!"

The cop stands at a distance and says, "Yeah, but you have AIDS."

If you think that can't happen, you're wrong. It happened last May in Phoenix, and it will happen here in California if Prop. 96 passes.

Prop. 96 allows courts to order testing of persons charged with sexual assault and "interfering" with peace officers, fireflighters and emergency medical personnel. The test results must be reported to the state health department; to the person who requested the test; to the individual tested; and to the staff of the jail or prison facility if that person is incarcerated.

Prop. 96 also requires medical personnel in jails and prisons to report the identity of any arrestee they suspect has been exposed to the AIDS virus to the facility commander, who in turn is required to report that information to the correctional staff and anyone else who might come in contact with the arrestee while in

Proponents say Prop. 96 is simply a protective measure for crime victims and peace officers.

Don't believe it! Prop. 96 is a disaster for civil rights, for AIDS prevention and education, and for California's county jails.

Before you vote, consider the following:

Proposition 96 virtually guarantees the creation of AIDS lists. Think about it. There are more than 1.3 million county jail bookings in California every year, and about 150 diseases considered "communicable" and therefore subject to Prop. 96 reporting.

How can facility commanders keep track of the medical status of everyone in custody? By computer.

How do law enforcement agencies communicate with their own employees and with other law enforcement agencies? By computer.

How will a peace officer fulfill tial medical information on hundreds of thousands of individuals. Do you really think they can keep matters confidential, or that they want to?

Prop. 96 will set AIDS education and prevention back 15 years. Now, more than ever, peace officers need credible information about reducing their on-thejob risk, but Prop. 96 would instead ignite unfounded fears.

Responsible medical experts know that AIDS can only be transmitted by sexual contact, sharing of needles and transfusion of contaminated blood. But Prop. 96 would create a state law that says AIDS is also transmitted by spitting, biting and scratching.

Prop. 96 is unnecessary. SB 1913 and SB 2643, while not perfect, were passed by the California legislature and became law in October of this year. While these laws provide for testing in sexual assualt cases and other situations, they also mandate training for cops, counseling for victims and funding to support the law.

Prop. 96 locks California into an oppressive, expensive testing and reporting program. Because it is an initiative, Prop. 96, if approved, can only be changed by another initiative.

If you do nothing else this last weekend before Election Day, get on the phone and tell everyone you know to vote No! No! No! on this ill-conceived, ill-advised, destructive initiative. Prop. 96 must be defeated.

Prop. 102 for instance, or the horror of a Bush/Quayle victory, or my friend Harry Britt could fail to do extremely well! By now I trust you have decided to be good guys on these issues. However, while there are many additional important propositions and people to be voted upon the one that most worries me is Prop. O. Proposition O is the two-term recall dragged from under some rock by our old friend, the one and only (thank God!) John Barbagelata.

Surely you remember Barbagelata. He was a supervisor for years and years and to my knowledge during that time never voted for anything that was important to me or to the gay community or to (God forbid) the liberals. He is a reactionary and conservative Republican. Many of you remember the election of 1976 when Prop. T passed and we had won district elections, finally.

In a special election in August 1977, Mr. Barbagelata and friends caused there to be a special election to recall Mayor George Moscone and Sheriff Dick Hongisto, among others, and to repeal District elections even before the first vote for district elected supervisors in November 1977. He lost and "we" won.

I was elected to the board in December 1979 and began my term in January 1980. Determined to rid the board (and I suspect he hoped the city) of the likes of Nancy Walker and Harry Britt, Mr. Barbagelata went to work again. He caused there to be a special election in August 1980. He won this one and district elections was repealed. For the last decade John Barbagelata has been the source not of good government efforts but of meanspirited, distorted and chaoscausing initiatives.

If Prop. O passes (and all the pros say it will), three obvious things will happen:

- Election of supervisors will be moved back to low-turnout odd numbered years, to the benefit historically of very conservative voters.
- The first supervisorial election under the new system will be in November 1989.
- Supervisors Britt, Kennedy, Maher, Nelder, Hongisto, Silver, Walker and Ward will be ineligible to run for re-election in that 1989 election.

On Nov. 8 you will elect six members of the Board of Supervisors to four year terms in office. If Barbagelata's recall passes, three of those six just elected supervisors will be thrown out of office. Vote No on Prop. 0. ▼

Sup. Harry Britt for President of the Board

by Paul Melbostad

strongly support Harry Britt for president of the Board of Supervisors, not only because he is the unparalleled leader on lesbian and gay issues, but he is also by far the leading advocate for the average citizen in San Francisco struggling to afford to live here. It speaks well of Harry Britt that long ago he shed the identification as merely "the gay supervisor" and became recognized throughout our city as the leader for affordable housing, neighborhood preservation, small businesses and for legal and economic justice for every disadvantaged group.

Unlike most of the other supervisors, Harry Britt has never succumbed to the temptation to vote for legislation backed by the Chamber of Commerce or Board of Realtors to obtain large campaign donations or sweetheart deals on real estate. Harry has steadfastly fought for the interests of lower income San Franciscans, even though they cannot afford to give large contributions to campaigns.

Harry is the only supervisor who truly lives like an average San Franciscan on the meager $23,000 salary a supervisor receives and, therefore, can relate to the average San Franciscan. He has often offered the only hope for persons with AIDS, senior citizens and others on limited incomes seeking to improve their quality of life.

Entire Community

would like to express my support and admiration for Sup. Tom Nolan from San Mateo County. Tom Nolan has gained the respect of the people of San Mateo County as a gay officeholder and as an accomplished politician. Tom has actively brought our issues to the public in a productive and effective manner.

He has created what has been labeled "a model response to AIDS" through the San Mateo County AIDS Project. It was Tom's effort and persistence that initiated that program. He has emerged as a credible supervisor, and further, an outstanding representative of what we can be as openly gay people.

Tom is currently running his campaign for a seat in the state Senate for the 11th Senate District. I see Tom as an excellent candidate for this position, and an equally effective spokesman for issues concerning our community. He offers an opportunity for our interests to be represented in the state legislature as a constant reminder that our community's presence is significant, valid, and an integral part of the population.

Tom continues to accomplish the steps we are all taking toward liberating our friends and families as openly gay. He has addressed the inclusion of sexual orientation in nondiscrimination policy in San Mateo County, helped the people of his county to address AIDS as an issue requiring a compassionate response, and above all, presented himself as a gay member of the Board of Supervisors to the general population.

I urge you to join me in support of Tom Nolan. This is an opportunity to take a large step in bringing us further out and into a position of visibility and respect. Tom's election to the state Senate will be of great benefit to our community, the residents of the 11th district and the residents of the State of California worked to elect other candidates who will support his progressive agenda, such as Pat Norman, Terrence Hallinan and Angela Alioto

From speaking to political leaders in other parts of the country, I know that Harry Britt has tremendously increased the political crout and respectability of the lesbian and gay community. I recently attended a major Democratic Party dinner in Ashville, North Carolina (the state where both Harry and I attended college). I sat next to a member of the North Carolina General Assembly from a rural part of the state. During the dinner, I was stunned when he asked me "How is Harry Britt doing?" and said, "I was really pulling for him in his campaign for Congress." At the time I left North Carolina in 1981, no politician there would even admit to knowing, and certainly not supporting, a gay politician.

I urge every member of the lesbian and gay community to not only vote for Harry Britt, but urge all your friends to vote for him so that he will be reelected and become president of the board. Then, with the power to appoint committee chairs, and Mayor Art Agnos' support, he will be able to pass far-reaching domestic partners legislation and maximize city services for persons with AIDS/ARC.

By electing a gay man to the board with the highest number of votes citywide, San Francisco will send a strong message nation-wide that the AIDS epidemic has not weakened, but rather strengthened the community's support for the lesbian and gay community. Harry would become even more of a national figure and have a much greater opportunity to tell the people of our country what lesbian and gay people are all about.

I urge everyone to do what they can to help Harry between now and Nov. 8.

Sup. Carol Ruth Silver Has Earned Our Vote

by Ron Braithwaite, President, Alice B. Toklas Lesbian/Gay Democratic Club

hen you walk into Sup. Carol Ruth Silver's private office at City Hall, hanging prominently on the Hall, hanging prominently on the wall is a framed check—a 1976 campaign donation from Harvey Milk. That check is a constant reminder of her first and closest alliance on the Board of Supervisors, and the fact that she and Harvey, with opposition from Dan White, worked together to pass the first gay rights ordinance in the city's history. That was the start of a long and distinguished commitment to lesbian and gay rights and one of lesbian and gay rights and one of many reasons I am supporting Carol Ruth Silver for re-election.

To put it very simply, Carol Ruth has been there. In those ear-ly days when she was elected in Ruth has been thete. In those cal-ly days when she was elected in District 6 (Mission/Duboce), she and Harvey formed a partnership on the board to speak for those people who had previously not had a voice at City Hall, in-cluding lesbians and gay men. In those days that was not a popular stand to take. It's hard to remember, now that we take the support of all our elected officials support of all our elected officials for granted—what a political liability it was at one time to support gay rights. But Carol Ruth was there even when it was hard and unfashionable.

After Harvey was killed, an event that deeply changed her life, Carol Ruth was even more determined in her concern about civil rights issues. On historic White Night, when our community got the horrible news about Dan White's revoltingly short sentence and were hammering on the doors of City Hall, Carol Ruth Silver was the only one of San Francisco's public officials brave enough to come and speak to the crowd. She got a brick thrown in her face, and was injured, but still stayed on with gay community leaders and worked to try to restore order.

Many people in our community are new in the area, or are too young to remember these events. I bring them up now, because I think it's important to remember those who have always been the friends of our community and who we can count on absolutely in the difficult battles yet to come. Carol Ruth is one of those people. Political winds change, hot issues come and go but Carol Ruth's commitment to the civil rights of lesbians and gay men has been and always will be 100 percent. For that reason, I believe our community needs to take the lead in electing her.

I remember all too well the event in 1982 which brought

Carol Ruth some of the most flack of her political career. The news hit that the Queen of England had fired one of her chief guards at Buckingham Palace for being gay. Carol Ruth, without thought to the political ramifica-tions to herself fired off an official letter of indignation to the queen, protesting the firing. Well, the local press had a field day attacking Carol for taking on the queen and satirized her with editorial cartoons for days. (One of these cartoons, also framed, is proudly hanging on the office wall.) But I think this episode does point out the depth of Carol Ruth's commitment to our

As president of the largest gay and lesbian political club in the country, it is my job to work with our elected officials. I do this every day in order to advocate and lobby for issues that are important to our community. We do not have slick professional lobbyists representing our interests and huge financial resources for campaign contributions, so work ing with elected officials is really a grass roots effort.

You get to know them pretty well if you do this for a while. Carol Ruth and her staff (several of whom over the years have been gay) have always been very sup-portive and accessible. I can always reach the supervisor and her staff and there has never been a time that they have not been able to answer any concerns I might have. That kind of access is important to our community. It means that we have a voice in shaping our city's policies as they relate to our lives

As chair of the Human Services Committee, Carol Ruth Silver has had a hand in almost all the AIDS related legislation that comes before the city. Her leadership has been crucial in continue in that job. San Francis-co's response to the AIDS Crisis has been a model across the country in spite of a criminally poor amount of federal participation. Carol Ruth has played no small part in that response.

In addition, it has been my pleasure to work closely with Carol Ruth Silver on some of the most controversial issues of the past year. She was there solidly and unquestionably for our community and I think it's time for us to pay that back with our uncompromising support.

Under enormous pressure to sell out our civil rights so that the city could make a bid for the Olympics, Carol Ruth stood firm. That pressure included withdrawal of support, loss of campaign funding, threats and harassment of staff. I know how bad it was be-cause I saw it happening—but Carol Ruth stood firm because she believed it was the right thing to do.

Under even greater pressure to homeport the USS Misouri in San Francisco Bay, Carol Ruth again stands firm and has even taken time away from her own campaign to campaign against the Missouri—largely because of the Navy's discriminatory policy against gays and lesbians

And when it came time to fight the battle against the Reagan Administration's attempts to appoint Vaughn Walker to the federal bench, Carol once again stood with the gay men and les-bians of San Francisco and said

I hope you will all join me, Mayor Art Agnos, Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy and Bob Ross in sup-porting Carol Ruth Silver for reelection. I think she's earned it!

Gay Candidate Challenges Roberti

Gay Republican Tom Larkin is challenging California Senate President Pro-Tem David Roberti for the state Senate seat he has held for 16 years. The district covers Hollywood, Burbank, and the Wilshire district of Los Angeles and includes the heavily gay populated areas of West Hollywood and Silverlake.

Larkin said it is time "for our 10 percent of the population to finally achieve representation." If elected, Larkin will be the first openly gay state office holder in the state of California.

"We can no longer just rely on our friends. Our friends must ac-cept us as whole individuals and allow us to sit at the table of representation with them" said Larkin. "Our state needs the input of an openly gay person to give our insight on the AIDS crisis, to fight for our rights, and to educate legislators on gay and lesbian causes and concerns.

Larkin won the June Republican Primary Election with 60 percent of the vote in a field of three candidates. He ran as an openly gay candidate in the primary. Larkin currently serves on the Board of Directors of the National Cay Birbht Advances. on the Board of Directors of the National Gay Rights Advocates (NGRA), and the Log Cabin Club of Los Angeles. He is a local activist in community affairs in the city of West Hollywood.

This year, we saw Roberta Achtenberg defeated by Burton in San Francisco, because Willie Brown and the party supported Burton. Another gay district. Why didn't the party support this candidate?" he asked.

"How long must we wait for the party leaders to finally decide to give us a voice? They are certainly there to get our money," he

by Supervisor Harry Britt

ust mentioning the topic of parking is enough to send a chill up the spine of the average San Franciscan. How long, we ask ourselves, till someone does something about parking, particularly in our neighborhoods? Well, finally, we're going to try and do something about this, one of the most confounding of the city's problems.

Working with the neighborhoods and the support of Mayor Art Agnos, I wrote Prop. D and succeeded in having it placed on this November's ballot. This initiative would consolidate and centralize the management of all traffic and parking into one, new department, which would at last be able to begin to get a handle on this problem.

The difficulty in the past has been that there is no common strategy to deal with this disarray. A study conducted by one of the country's leading traffic and parking consultants, Brophy and Associates, found that some 13 different city agencies all have a hand in parking and traffic management.

Now you and I both know that dealing with one bureaucracy can be bad enough, but having to contend with 13 different bureaucracies is just plain ridiculous. San Francisco should respond better to problems like this, and by passing Prop. D, we can.

What would this new department mean?

Improved Parking: More efficient and coordinated enforcement means more parking space turnover and more parking space for everyone. Curbing double-parked trucks and easier procedures for implementing cost-effective solutions like diagonal parking and residential parking programs, will greatly ease the problem.

More Efficient Management: With all of the primary functions under one roof, a new Parking and Traffic Department would much more effectively coordinate the wide variety of responsibilities currently spread throughout city government. It would also have parking and traffic as its number one priority, not at the bottom. A number of other cities, including Los Angeles, have recently reorganized their parking and traffic function in the same way with great results.

Increased Revenues: It has been projected that an additional $11.4 million a year could be generated for the general fund through better enforcement, unified collection procedures and improved productivity and staff morale. In budgetary times as tough as these, this revenue would help keep our taxes down and help maintain needed programs in other areas.

Better Citizen Response: The average San Franciscan would have a central place where they could provide their input and voice their concerns. The kind of bureaucratic duplication that causes so much frustration will finally begin to be overcome.

Transit First: Long the official policy of the city, the concept of Transit First will for the first time be embodied in the city charter. This policy, that public transportation should be the preferred means for moving people throughout the city, and other policy goals are included in the powers and duties section of the proposed amendment, and the Parking and Traffic Commission would be required to consider these policy objectives when making decisions.

What would the Parking and Traffic Department be responsible for? The major areas which would be consolidated include off-street parking, primarily cityowned garages and lots; on-street parking, such as parking meters, and colored curbs; parking and traffic enforcement, such as ticket enforcement, towing, and

by Carole Migden Chair, San Francisco Democratic Party

tis important to defeat Prop. W. This measure asks us, as San Franciscans, to support a Palestinian state on the West Bank and Gaza Strip. And while we all support autonomy for the Palestinians, we can only do a disservice to ourselves and the people of the world if we support Prop. W.

What the Middle East desperately needs is peace. We have seen much too much violence over the last 40 years. Only through a lasting—and just—peace can the people of the Middle East ever achieve a life without violence and suffering.

With that in mind, our greatest goal, as people not directly involved in the conflict, is to bring the parties together and make them work to agree to a peaceful settlement. I'm convinced that if we get the Palestinians and Israelis to sit down across from each other at the bargaining table, they will gain the peace they need.

Nine years ago, we saw that this was possible, Israel and Egypt, once bitter enemies, saw the goal of peace. Through a negotiated settlement, Egypt and Israel were able to end the state of war between their nations. The United States played an important role in bringing about this peaceful resolution. President Jimmy Carter brought the sides together, and for the first time, the President of Egypt and the Prime Minister of Israel worked face to face. The Camp David Accords show that through direct negotiations, people can make peace.

The problem with Prop. W is that it undermines this process. Negotiations can only be successful when both parties come together without preconditions. A peace to which both can agree must be their only goal.

While Prop. W may state what may, in the end, become the solution for the Middle East conflict, it fails to account for the highly unstable situation in the Middle East. We've seen changes in the leadership on both sides, and clearly now, it is a time of change and great fluidity. We need to take advantage of these possible moderations by bringing the sides together, not by driving them away from the negotiating process.

Why should we attempt to dictate to the Palestinian or Israeli people what the particular terms of a settlement should be? Prop. W's specificity sets harmful preconditions on those striving to agree on a solution both can live with. With delicate negotiations in the balance, we cannot afford to meddle.

The frustrating thing is that we have tried to do this before. The United States has a record of meddling in the affairs of other countries: Vietnam, El Salvador, Lebanon, Nicaragua. The Lebanon experience is particularly unsettling because U.S. intervention led to the death of 242 Marines in the Middle East. We have intervened too many times. From 10,000 miles away it is condescending at best and foolishly dangerous at worst to believe that we know more about the conflict than those involved. It's time to stop our arrogance.

Our arrogance is not only improper, but could be harmful. In the Middle East, it will only drive the hardliners away from the negotiating table. Entrenched, they will not work towards peace.

Surely we can help bring about peace. We must work toward that goal. To do that we must bring the sides together. We must not step in and impose our solution.

Let's not make an already sad situation worse. Let's work for a serious peace process. To do that we must defeat Prop. W.

But to increase those fines and start another state bureaucratic department is absurd, for building code violations in most cities seem to be at the whim of building inspectors. As no one knows what is or is not a violation from day to day, this would make Prop. A a three-ring circus. Hsieh Is a Voice of Reason

by Jerry E. Berg

here's one door on the Board of Supervisors that's always open, Room 254—Sup. Tom Hsieh. Hsieh recently began his third year on the board. He has been involved in San Francisco politics for several years. I know Tom personally and I respect his fair and evenhanded approach on each issue. I support his election return to the Board of Supervisors.

Politics is complex and stereoypes are dangerous. Every member of the lesbian and gay community knows that. Tom Hsieh knows that. One can't expect a supervisor to vote in harmony with a community platform on every issue. If a supervisor earns the ire of any community group in San Francisco, it is our responsibility to continue to reach out and educate that supervisor. It is critical that we understand a supervisor's voting motivations. I believe that with Tom Hsieh we can count on access and accountability.

Differences are a natural part of politics. It is paramount to review voting patterns on a balanced series of issues. Tom Hsieh has a consistent and well-respected voting record.

Hsieh was a tough Police Commissioner who worked to strengthen the disciplinary role of the commission in addressing misconduct and harassment charges. During his years as a commissioner, he was directly involved in the suspension and firing of at least ten officers who were charged by the Office of Citizen Complaints (OCC) with misconduct and harassment. This effort to cleanup the Police Department was welcomed during a volatile period when "gaybashing" cases were peaking.

Hsieh sponsored legislation to allow a flowershop owner to pass on the permit location and business rights of operation to his surviving lover. This changed the longstanding law which prevented this transition.

Hsieh sponsored a successful, early fundraiser for the opening of Coming Home Hospice.

Hsieh authored legislation to urge Congress to allow the Gay Games to use the name Gay Olympics.

Hsieh has consistently voted to support AIDS education and prevention programs.

Hsieh opposes state Props. 96 and 102 which would cast a severe and negative blow to the confidentiality of critical AIDS testing and research.

Hsieh has actively supported the growth of the Asian American Residential Recovery Services, which has expanded to include the Asian Substance Abuse Project, Pilipino Early Intervention Project and the Asian AIDS Project.

Hsieh was the first member of the board to join in co-sponoring Sup. Harry Britt's domestic partnership ordinance relating to bereavement leave, child care leave and hospital visitation rights.

Hsieh authored legislation to create an Emergency Medical Services Fund to generate nearly a half-million dollars annually to support emergency room doctors, the Department of Public Health and hospitals who provide emergency medical treatment to medically indigent adults.

Lilienthal Fights For Gay Rights

by Laurie McBride and Peter N. Fowler

e are supporting Bruce Lilienthal for three very good reasons: he has supported our community in the past, he is actively supporting our community today, and we are convinced that as a supervisor he will be there to not only support us but to fight for our causes.

We have both worked with him over the years. Given his openness and genuine understanding of our concerns in this city, we have the greatest confidence in Bruce to be a leader fighting for our community on such issues as domestic partners legislation, adequate AIDS funding and treatment programs, anti-gay violence programs and affordable housing.

We both believe that Bruce passes with flying colors the key test we must demand from every candidate and office holder: his strong commitment to gay, lesbian and bisexual rights, the priority he would give to AIDS issues, and his personal belief in our value as individuals. As a recognized small business leader, he spoke out against the homophobic Olympics proposition last June when several incumbents supported it.

As an attorney, Bruce has supported the AIDS Legal Referral Panel. He is active in fundraising for several AIDS organizations, including Open Hand and the AIDS Emergency Fund. He has sponsored and contributed to fundraisers, underwritten events, and marched in the Lesbian/Gay Freedom Day Parade to collect pennies for the fight against AIDS. He has been vocal in opposing Props. 64, 69, 96, and 102, actively campaigning against Prop. 102 this fall by writing guest editorials in the San Francisco Progress and the San Francisco Business Times, and even carrying the message against Prop. 102 on his campaign signs throughout the city.

Bruce has supported our community's candidates in the past and present, including Harry Britt for Supervisor, Roberta Achtenberg for Assembly, Tom Nolan for San Mateo County Supervisor and State Senator, Paul Wotman for Community College Board, and Pat Norman for Supervisor.

On issues of concern to our community, Bruce strongly supports full comparable benefits for domestic partners in both the public and private sectors, and supports and would vote for Supervisor Britt's domestic partners legislation. He supports the maximum possible city funding to put a halt to the epidemic, and will lobby hard for increased state and federal funding for AIDS treatment, research, and education.

He would help expand current efforts at a public-private sector partnership to deal with direct care and service for people with AIDS in San Francisco. Bruce will not only help us build bridges to other communities, like the San Francisco downtown and neighborhood business community, which we need to help fight AIDS, but will make it his priority to encourage an increase in corporate contributions to assist AIDS organizations.

Bruce has shown the breadth of support within our community and the city needed to be an effective supervisor by receiving the endorsements of the Stonewall Gay Democratic Club, Concerned Republicans for Individual Rights, the Bay Area Non-Partisan Alliance, Coming Up, the Bay Guardian and Bay Area Reporter. He also has the support of such leaders within our community as Ray Benson, SFPD gay community liaison; Ruth Brinker, founder and executive director of Open Hand; George Burgess, former president of the AIDS Emergency Fund; Norm Nickens of the Human Rights Commission; Wayne Friday, political columnist for the Bay Area Reporter; Ray Herth, owner of Herth Realty; Shawn Kelly, former executive director of Gay Games II; Sup. Tom Nolan of San Mateo County; and Dr. Juanita Owens, former Police Commissioner.

We urge you to say Yes to gay rights and vote for Bruce Lilienthal on Nov. 8.

10 Good Reasons Why...

While some candidates become election-year converts to gay causes, Bruce has been there for years. In addition to Bruce's support of candidates like Pat Norman, Harry Britt and Roberta Achtenberg, our law firm has supported the AIDS legal referral panel and has provided pro bono legal representation to numerous gay causes.

Gonzalez Builds Bridges

by Dr. Juanita Owens

ost lesbians and gays know that a second wave of the AIDS epidemic has arrived. While many in our community have been educated about having safe sex and the realities of AIDS, the message has not been successfully targeted to the Black, Asian and Latino communities. This is a situation which cries out for attention. Sup. Jim Gonzalez has given it the priority it deserves. As a Latino, he understands that culture can be a potent force in communicating a life and death message.

Jim has consistently supported efforts to bridge the gaps between gays and Latinos. Back in 1976, when he was running for the Board of Education, he campaigned vigorously for developing a gay curriculum in public schools in order to promote better understanding between our communities. As a school teacher, he co-founded Latinos Against the Briggs Initiative to show that gays and Latinos stood together against prejudice.

Since becoming a supervisor in the middle of the AIDS crisis, he has shown the same type of concern. He has worked hard to help develop programs which will educate gay and heterosexual Latinos about AIDS prevention and the services available.

In order to better understand how AIDS affects Latinos, Jim became a member of the multicultural AIDS Inquiry and Research Project. This program was an intensive five week seminar geared towards gathering information about AIDS in minority communities and developing effective ways of disseminating it.

Jim strongly supported Sup. Harry Britt's efforts to have every city department adopt an AIDS education program for its employees. As a result of this seminar, he had the background and information needed to send a letter to all city department heads asking them to comply with Sup. Britt's request. At present, Jim is making every effort to see that the Health Commission comes up with the guidelines for such programs for use by the city and also by private corporations.

Specially targeted programs are necessary because some Latinos are not acculturated into the mainstream of American life. Using written literature may not be an effective way of reaching them because of the language barrier. Traditionally, visual or audio media have been more successful.

Another problem is that many lesbian and gay Latinos don't define themselves primarily as lesbian or gay. Some are still closeted due to the stigmas operating in their culture. Thus, they cannot be reached through the traditional gay media and have to be educated through Latino outlets.

Jim has helped break through these walls by finding the funds for educational programs, like the Latino AIDS Project which can reach gay Latinos. For instance, in Latin America the telenovela, or soap opera, is a popular form of entertainment. So Jim colaborated with KDTV Channel 14 and Pacific Telesis to produce Ojos que no ven a telenovela aimed at teaching Latinos about AIDS.

Imaginative ideas are needed

to help fight the second wave of the AIDS epidemic. Unfortunately, the old ways of teaching people how to slow the spread of AIDS won't work. Luckily in San Francisco, we have the human resources needed to think up new methods.

But we need financial and moral support from our city government to organize this talent and make the programs work. Jim Gonzalez has consistently been a member of the Board of Supervisors who understands us. Whenever our community has needed funds for organizational help for any project, Jim was there. On Nov. 8, we need to keep Jim on the Board to make sure that minority AIDS projects get the overdue support so vitally needed.

Vote for College Reform

by Tim Wolfred, Member, Community College Board

he four San Francisco College Board incumbents running for reelection Nov. 8—Chuck Ayala, Amos Brown, Julie Tang, and myself—have a remarkable record of educational achievements. All were accomplished during a period of declining revenues for California community colleges.

We came to power in the 1980 election with a vision of a college system expanded beyond its middle-class base to provide learning opportunities to those traditionally left out by academia—minorities, lesbians and gay men, the poor, single parents, working people, seniors, the disabled.

The pioneering Lesbian & Gay Studies Department at City College, the Castro/Valencia college center at 16th and Church streets, the hiring of openly gay faculty and administrators are examples important to our community that the College Board has made its vision real.

And college centers have been upgraded in all the neighborhoods in need in San Francisco. We are especially proud of the new facility opened just three years ago in the Bayview/Hunters Point area. Child care is now available in some centers; our goal is child care in every college center.

An aggressive affirmativeaction program has increased the number of minority administrators and teachers in the district an essential element to an institution striving to be accessible and inviting to underserved and reticent student populations.

The Accrediting Commission for Community and Junior Colleges, in its 1988 review, acknowledged the College Board's success:

"The team was impressed with the wide diversity of program offerings which reflect the needs of San Francisco's heterogenous student clientele and with the commitment of SFCCD's faculty and staff toward striving for quality wherever teaching and learning take place."

his vision is not shared by Gov. Deukmejian, the source of 90 percent of our funds. He introduced tuition (an access barrier to lower-income groups) to our system in 1983. At the same time, he has choked off new revenues; the San Francisco Community College District has 18 percent fewer program dollars today than when I was elected in Financial hardships have meant deferred building maintenance and salaries lower than we would like. Staff development and student library funds have been restricted to balance the budget.

Because of the Deukmejianinduced budget stresses, the urban college districts in Alameda and Los Angeles counties went bankrupt and required state bailouts. We, in contrast, have kept all classrooms open and responsive to student needs.

As reformers not always refined in the ways of academia, my colleagues and I have angered (Continued on page 28)

66 Bruce Lilienthal is the only supe candidate to use his campaign signs to also urge a 'no' vote on Prop 102, and for that alone he gets my vote.

-Wayne Friday, BAR 10/27/88

We need leaders who not only support our causes, but who will fight for them.

With the exception of Harry Britt and Pat Norman, no other candidate has received as many community endorsements as Bruce Lilienthal.

Our City Needs a New Library

est your knowledge. Which of the following statements are true about the San Francisco Public Library System?

1. Franklin Roosevelt was President when the current main library building was declared at capacity.

2. The San Francisco Fire Department has declared the main library building to be a fire

3. Thousands of books have been put into storage and the library has been forced to turn down offers donating major book collections to San Francisco because it has no room.

4. Nearly four million people use the San Francisco library system each year, checking out 3.4 million books.

5. The San Francisco Library system provides over 3200 children's programs each year. 6. Since 1964, four separate studies have concluded that remodeling the existing building would ruin its character, still not providing adequate space and would cost nearly as much as building a new structure.

7. The San Francisco Library system consists of the main building, housing 94 percent of the total collection, and 26 branches.

8. The Eureka Valley/Harvey Milk Memorial Branch contains a significant gay and lesbian book collection; a community advisory committee assists in developing that collection and planning programs.

School Board Gives Lip Service With No Gloss

by Tom Ammiano, Candidate for S.F. School Board

ne of the most frequently found motifs adorning the walls of San Francisco schools is still "Kill Fags." "Faggot!" is still the most often heard word on the playground. I used to counter with, "It's Mr. Fag to you," but I couldn't keep up with it.

I seriously doubt if anyone serving on the current school board shares the blood lust of these scrawlings and ravings. That is a problem. Just because they don't identify with the extreme we are grateful, and let them cluck and wash their hands of the everyday homophobia present in the schools. Well, as Divine so aptly put it in Hairspray, "fetch me my diet pills, hon, the times they are a changin."

When I first started with this district as a special education teacher in 1969, I was fresh from Viet Nam, very nellie, and committed to teaching. The school board then was an annointed body that served at the pleasure of Mayor Joe Alioto. Joe was not very nellie despite a pronounced lisp. His commissioners were white as the driven snow, upper class, monolingual, and thought the word gay meant carefree. Too bad for them because the school's cloakrooms were overflowing with closeted teachers. The joke went, "show me a room full of teachers, and I'll show you a gay bar."

Yes, we were all very carefree except when it came to job security.

The early to mid-seventies brought to San Francisco an awareness of the Stonewall riots, the surfacing of a pony-tailed Harvey Milk, and the formation of Bay Area Gay Liberation (BACL). Along with Hank Wilson, I started the Gay Teachers Coalition. When Milk met Hank and I he suggested we call it the Very Gay Teachers Coalition.

The concept of openly gay teachers upset a lot of people's applecarts:

"I'm sorry we don't hire day teachers," responded one befuddled union offical to my inquiry about employment protection for gay teachers. Then on two sunny Mondays in June 1975, over 200 people disrupted two school board meetings and succeeded in getting sexual orientation included in the non-discrimination clause. A small plié for man, a grand jetteé for mankind.

Soon after this the school board became an elected body. Comparatively speaking things have improved but not fast enough.

Still, today the school board does not get the scrutiny it deserves. It is a powerful, if often farcical, little commission. In 1975, for instance, the teachers' unions had refused to help gay teachers. However, when the school board did, they followed suit

Domestic partners comes immediately to mind as an example of a policy the board could initiate. In Berkeley the school board has already done so.

Getting the Gay Speakers Bureau off the ground took longer than necessary despite our friends on the board who won by large margins thanks to the gay vote. Then-board-member Bill Maher kept saying he had a problem with the speakers bureau "promotion" of a gay lifestyle.

Through the efforts of the current gay teachers organization BANGLE, the two most recent steps taken by the board have been the institution of an antisur policy (Santa Barbara had one in 1976) and the appointment of a gay sensitive person at every high school. While these are positive steps, my problem with them is that board members point to these "accomplishments" and expect an endorsement and a check.

However, these so-called accomplishments are the tip of a very big iceberg. Elementary schools are as much in need of gay sensitivity and sex education, the speakers bureau should be allowed in all schools and not just in sex ed classes but also in civics and history. The pressing needs of gay students and the large number of gay parents need to be addressed. Family life teachers must have better training and support, AIDS education expanded and more comprehensive.

Yet board members tend to equivocate at the mention of these and other sound educational principles, none of which are at cross purposes with the core curriculum.

The closet mentality on the part of middle management sabotages progress. Let's face it, beads have to read and who better to do it than an openly gay board member. I tried in 1980 and found our friends were hesitant to reciprocate all the help they had received.

I turned to comedy which I find a more creative and impactful arena for me. It's no secret that I threw my hat and matching shoes into the ring this time not so much to win but to get a hearing on ideas whose time has District elections of school board is one idea. The cost of running citywide is criminal and excludes competent community oriented people. District elections would open up the process, 21 percent of school board meetings were held in closed session in violation of the Brown Act. They also would allow pluralistic representation from within minority groups, end tokenism, and break the pitbull death grip of incumbents.

On this, the tenth anniversary of his death, a school should be named in honor of Harvey Milk, who believed kids are everyone's future. We owe it to them to have gay representation on the board if not this time, the next.

San Francisco's power sales contracts with Modesto and Tur-lock for Class III power expired in 1985, and the city operated under an interim agreement for the last three years while longterm contracts were negotiated. In return, the city pays PG&E an annual fee of $4.5 million. This fee is also in payment to PG&E for providing backup power to Hetch Hetchy so that the city can be assured of sufficient power to serve its municipal loads in San Francisco.

San Francisco makes an average net profit of about $28 million a year, or nearly $1 billion over the life of the contracts. over the life of the contracts. That's more than twice what the city made under the old contracts. The profits generated from these Hetch Hetchy power sales are directly transferable to the city's general fund and benefit every citizen of San Francisco.

Proposition Z on the Nov. 8 San Francisco ballot seeks to ter-minate these contracts. Proposition Z is sponsored by a group of individuals calling themselves the "Hetch Hetchy Power Rights

San Francisco can ill afford to face the severe budgetary cuts inevitable if Prop. Z passes. At a time when the need for public funding for AIDS research and related care is so crucial, Prop. Z would cause the city to cancel agreements, which which result in an immediate loss of $30 million in average annual revenues from the general fund. This would inevitably lead to reductions in all city programs, including essential AIDS-related services.

Proposition Z is just what we don't need—a misguided initiative that impacts our chances for adequate funding.

Help the Asian Art Collection Expand

by Sup. Richard Hongisto

he city's Asian Art Collection, one of the finest and most extensive in the country, includes the art of 40 countries from the Middle East to Japan and from China to Indonesia. Its scope is breathtaking. Its contribution to our cultural scene is priceless.

What was once a beautiful private collection is now a public collection. When Avery Brundage gave his collection to the city of San Francisco, the residents were greatly enriched. Now, all citizens are able to enjoy this intriguing and valuable collection of art.

Currently, the Asian Art Museum is located in a wing of the DeYoung Museum in Golden Gate Park. The collection has outgrown its present quarters. While this in and of itself is unfortunate, what is most unfortunate is the fact that many treasured pieces of art remain tucked away in warehouses far from the public view, because they lack the necessary exhibit space to properly show the vast collection.

At the same time that the collection is only partially exhibited, we face the administrative question as to how most effectively manage this growing museum. Under a condition of accepting half of the collection in 1959, the city set up an Asian Art Commission.

sion appointed by the mayor to manage the collection. However, the museum has continued to expand since that time, and a stronger, more efficient style of management seems in order.

As the collection has developed, it has become important that the Asian Art Commission, like other major city commissions, become a charter-authorized commission. This step would allow the commission, as authorized by a vote of the people, to manage its affairs more directly, to proceed in undertaking steps to find a new home for the Asian Art Museum, to raise private funds for its expansion and further exhibition of this magnificent collection of art. It is the next logical step in preserving and exposing a collection of such cultural significance.

Like the War Memorial Commission, which governs the use of and management of the War Memorial Buildings including the Symphony Hall, Opera House, Ballet Theater and Museum of Modern Art, the Asian Art Commission, under charter authority, could launch plans to acquire land and property to house the Asian Art Museum. The proposed amendment to the charter would allow the commission to pursue this alternative to the overcrowded condition at the DeYoung Museum.

San Francisco's scenic beauty, cultural heritage and architectual charm have made our city one of the best loved places to visit by tourists across the country and from around the world. Our commitment to the arts from the hotel tax dollars that fund the grants-in-the-arts program for local artists to our patronage of such major art organizations such as the ballet, symphony, opera and museums, is a matter of community pride. The civic spirit that is fostered through active participation and involvement in the arts has contributed greatly not only to our economic titality, but also to our significance in the United States as one of the leaders in the field of art.

A commitment to enhancing our already prestigious Asian Art Museum will most decidedly benefit ourselves, residents of this vibrant city. It will also continue to attract the attention of world travellers. Economic studies in the past have shown that San Francisco's arts scene has helped to spur our local economy by continuing to attract tourists and national conventions. The benefits of an burgeoning arts community are difficult to miss.

The collection deserves an exhibit space which is readily accessible to all members of the public—both residents and tourists. It is a collection we can be most proud of and enjoyed by all of us. The Asian Art collection is large enough that it merits its own charter commission so that the Asian Art Museum can become, in its own right, a major museum on San Francisco's cultural landscape.

aving observed the inside workings of this administration, no amount of campaign rhetoric could get me to vote for George Bush, a man I have known and admired for 15 years and whose training uniquely qualifies him to be president. Sadly, in his quest for the presidency, I have watched him deteriorate from a man of principle and character to a man who has sold out his principles to the right-wing bigots and his character for political expediency. If he had—or has—any good intentions around the AIDS issue, it is a secret. He is paralyzed by his fear of a right-wing backlash.

Knowing the bigots as I do, I can assure you that the perverted right-wing mentality will exact a terrible price for their support in a Bush/Quayle administration. They will continue to function at the second and third levels of the White House bureaucracy to undermine or block all positive, productive AIDS recommendations. After all, they have a vested interest in perpetuating the fear and prejudice from which this epidemic is born.

I might be tempted to agree with my gay Republican friends who support George Bush by citing "pocketbook issues" or "national defense," all things being equal.

But they are not!

AIDS is more financially destructive than any recession and is killing more of our fellows than any recent war.

We cannot afford to endorse or encourage this administration's past negative behavior. A vote for George Bush is an explicit endorsement of the indifference and malevolence which has already killed 50,000 people and has handed a death sentence to 1.5 million more in this country alone. The current status of AIDS is a direct result of Ronald Reagan's and George Bush's unwillingness to make research and prevention/education a national priority. They have had the resources and knowledge for years, but have been unwilling to act upon them. In so doing, they are responsible for hundreds of thousands of preventable infections.

eople at risk of HIV infection don't need tax reductions or aircraft carriers. They certainly don't need sandbagged research, constipated drug availability, discriminatory policies, indifferent treatment, or watered-down prevention education. They need an administration led by somebody who doesn't just talk a good game, but has a record of positive action.

For 6½ years, Reagan and Bush said nothing! When they finally did get around to saying something, they did nothing.

If their AIDS record isn't enough, and you are still having trouble bringing yourself to vote for Mike Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen, just think of Pres. Bush's and Vice Pres. Quayle's hands being guided by the ghost of Ronald Reagan, the intransigence of Jesse Helms, the bigotry of Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson, and the medical expertise of Bill Dannemeyer and Lyndon LaRouche.

That should make it easier for you Republicans and conservative Democrats to swallow hard and vote for Mike Dukakis. I'm going to!

Homeporting Means Jobs for San Francisco

by Sup. John Molinari

polls by proponents of Prop. 5, the U.S.S. Missouri initiative, indicate that of all groups of San Franciscans, the gay and lesbian community comprises the group least inclined to support the homeporting of the Missouri in San Francisco. An early poll done in August showed gays and lesbians less supportive of homeporting than the general population—33 percent in favor as compared to 55 percent citywide.

I am writing to ask those of you who oppose or are undecided on Prop. S—the homeporting of the Missouri—to take a second look and to vote yes on Prop. S and no on Prop. R. This year's budget difficulties have dramatized the need for San Francisco to expand its revenue base as a way to maintain necessary services.

Prop. S was placed on the ballot by a majority of the members of the Board of Supervisors who want the city to fulfill its obligations with the Navy to homeport the Missouri in San Francisco and not let its benefits go to another city.

Prop. R was placed on the ballot by opponents of the Missouri. It places conditions on homeporting that prevent the Navy from homeporting in San Francisco and will send the Missouri fleet, its jobs and benefits to Honolulu or Long Reach.

Although the gay and Lesbian community seems least inclined to support the Missouri homeporting overall, polls do indicate that there is considerable support for it among this group, if it does not cost the city money and it does not harm the environment.

Opposition was centered on concerns over costs to the city and the environment. These are legitimate concerns. However, if those who oppose the Missouri will take another look at the objective evidence I believe they will conclude that Prop. S will be good for all San Franciscans.

In his Oct. 3, State of the City address, Mayor Art Agnos emphasized the importance in San Francisco of improving our tax revenue base and enhancing economic prosperity.

Mayor Agnos said that current projections show that without further action San Francisco would have a deficit next year which would carry forward to future years. He adds that "The answer cannot be just more layoffs, service cuts or business tax hikes." In this speech the mayor spoke almost exclusively about our need to broaden our tax base.

I agree with Mayor Agnos. Although, I do not believe AIDS services are at risk of being reduced, many other services important to gays, lesbians and all San Franciscans are vulnerable to reductions unless we broaden our tax base.

Every economic study done on the homeporting shows that homeporting will increase tax revenues to the city. A conclusion also apparently arrived at in a study independently commissioned by the mayor which may be released soon.

The benefits of bringing the Navy to San Francisco are worth the small investment we have offered the Navy for them to come here. In essence San Francisco will receive $200 dollars for every $2 we invest. Let them spend our tax money here, not in Long Beach or Honolulu.

Mayor Agnos understands the importance of the Navy to San Francisco and, to his credit, he welcomed them as official sponsor during Fleet Week. He was willing to make an investment of his own staff's time in organizing the events and in agreeing to participate indirectly committed city services, such as police, so that we might enjoy the economic benefits.

On a smaller and more tangible scale, the success of Fleet Week gives all of us an idea of the potential economic value of the Navy to our tourist, hotel, restaurant, and retail industries. Add to that the economic benefits to our city's ailing ship repair industry or to the long-neglected residents of Bayview Hunters Point that would result from a permanent presence and it's hard to ignore the benefits of the Missouri to San Francisco.

Two areas of concern have been frequently identified over the years by San Franciscans concerned about the environment, damage to the bay from dredging and toxics on the shipyard property.

Environmental concerns have been extensively reviewed and addressed to the satisfaction of all the necessary review agencies. Concerns about dredging have been resolved. At the Environmental Protection Agency's request the Navy has agreed to move the dredging site north of the original site to avoid stirring up potential toxic sediments in the Hunter's Point area.

Simply put the toxics problem is being resolved by removing them. The Navy as part of the homeporting plan has already started the clean-up of the toxic chemicals in the shipyard.

As a footnote, it is interesting that proponents of Prop. R don't even raise the environment as a concern. In fact their only conditions on homeporting are requiring jobs for San Franciscans and requiring the military to pay all costs.

Mayor Agnos says that since becoming mayor he has had "to put aside his own philosophical views and concentrate on government finance." Under other political circumstances Mayor Agnos might be willing to support Prop. S. We are not constrained by those political concerns, vote yes on Prop. S and No on Prop. R.

parking control officers; and the Residential Parking Permit Program.

Would this create another bureaucracy? On the contrary, by absorbing the Parking Authority into the new Commission, there is no additional agency created. Bureaucratic duplication will actually be reduced.

Would this have an effect on police operations? We are the only major city in America in which the Police Department still manages parking tickets and parking offense towing. With coordinated communications and heightened priorities, the new department would complement the police and free them up for what they do best: fighting crime.

The road to accomplishing this worthwile change hasn't been easy. Those City Hall bureaucrats whose toes we're stepping on have been fighting us every step of the way, more concerned with protecting their turf than helping solve the problem. The majority, however, recognize that Prop. D is a true reform which will begin to create the kind of accountability the mayor and the board need to get the job done.

I urge you to join with me and Mayor Art Agnos, as well as all three lesbian and gay Democratic clubs in voting yes on Prop. D on Nov. 8.

City Propositions

Proposition A YES

Public Library Bonds

This is a bond authorization of $109.5 million to build a new main Civic Center library and would also earmark $5 million to seismically upgrade other library branches. The main library outgrew its current building four decades ago and is now an overcrowded firetrap. Rare books and manuscripts cannot be cared for properly. This bond issue merits your vote.

Proposition C YES City Controller— Term of Office

As it stands now, the controller is appointed by the mayor and approved by the Board of Supervisors. The term is for life. This proposal would create a ten-year term (same as the chief administrative officer), and the controller could be reappointed. To remove the controller would still require a two-thirds vote of the board.

Proposition D YES

Parking and Traffic Department Consolidation

This proposal would consolidate the parking authority of 12 different city departments and put them all under one central commission that would handle all city functions pertinent to traffic and parking.

Proposition E YES Park and Open Space Fund

This is an extension of the city's open space acquisition and maintenance program, which was enacted in 1974. It expires on June 30, 1990. This proposition would extend the program for another 15 years. It has been a worthwhile program and should be continued.

Proposition F YES Meet and Confer Authority

Would transfer to the mayor the power now held by the board to bargain with employee unions and appoint an employee relations director. All agreements negotiated by the mayor are still subject to approval by the Board of Supervisors.

YES Contract Approval Authority

Would change the manner in which the board now approves contracts involving city income in excess of $1 million. It now must approve by ordinance those contracts, and it must also approve by ordinance the changing or ending of those contracts. Under Prop. G, these matters could be handled by resolution. City contracts other than construction contracts with a term of ten years or more would also require approval by resolution. This means all departments would have to have board approval before large contracts can be awarded.

Proposition H YES Retirement System Tax Law Changes

Would allow the Board of Supervisors, by a two-thirds vote and upon the recommendation of the Retirement board, to change the city employee retirement plan to meet the changes in federal tax laws and to obtain tax benefits for employees at no cost to the city.

Proposition I YES Retirement System Community Property

Tax Changes

This would allow the Board of Supervisors to pass ordinances giving divorced spouses their "community property share" of lifetime pension benefits after the member dies.

Proposition J YES Police and Firefighter Pension Benefits

This new charter amendment would allow those officers hired prior to Nov. 2, 1976, who voluntarily resign after five or more years, to leave their money in the retirement system and to receive at age 50 a retirement benefit based on years served.

Proposition K YES Environmental Protection Loans

The city charter does not permit the city to accept loans from the state or federal government, even though it may be more cost-effective to finance environmental projects, without a vote of the people. This amendment would change that procedure and allow the CAO to compare costs and recommend to the board the most cost-effective measure. The board would then define cost-effectiveness and legislate on each project.

Proposition L YES Health Service Board Membership/Election

This would make the procedure for election of a member of the Health Service Board consistent with the election procedures for members of the Retirement Board.

Proposition M YES Muni-Negotiated Procurement

Would allow the Municipal Railway to use negotiated procurement to purchase mass-transit vehicles, rather than by low-bid process. This would allow Muni to better specify what we need in San Francisco and get better equipment for our city.

Proposition N YES

Asian Art Commission

To comply with provisions to receive the rest of the Avery Brundage Asian Art Collection, an Asian Art Commission must be established.

Proposition O NO Two-Term Limit on Supervisors

Nothing more than a vicious attack on the incumbents by John Barbagelata.

Proposition P YES Regulation of Taxicabs

Would repeal the Barbagelata Prop. K of June 1978. This would allow the board to change the rules for issuing taxi permits. However, the board would have to pass a law following he principles of Prop. K, including not allowing the transfer of permits.

Proposition Q NO Health Care Community Service

Would require private hospitals to give 90 days notice before closing, sale, or reducing services and would require public hearings on the potential negative impact these curtailments or closures might have.

TV Producers Agree To Edit Controversial Script

But Refuse to Say What Exactly Is Changed

by Allen White

Working under a cloud of distrust, the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, Mobilization Against AIDS, and ACT UP announced an agreement last week to work in a still undisclosed manner with Lorimar Pictures on post-production editing of Midnight Caller. The groups have been protesting one episode of the television series that features violence as a solution for AIDS concerns.

In Los Angeles, a person involved with the production, who spoke only under the condition of anonymity, said Oct. 26 that the changes thus far are only "cosmetic." The source said that the basic premise has not changed and that the lead of the show is still a bisexual knowingly spreading the AIDS virus and who appears to deserve to be murdered.

In San Francisco, a second ending was filmed of the episode. In the first filming, the person with the HIV virus is killed. In the second version, there is still an attempt to kill him, but the character with the gun is grabbed as it fires, and the shot misses.

The episode has finished filming in San Francisco. During that time, filming was halted twice by protesters from ACT UP who were outraged by the script. The episode portrays a man who originally was to have been violently murdered after he makes a woman pregnant, knowing he has been infected with HIV.

In a statement, Lorimar Pictures said they had "agreed to consult the organizations during the post-production process of the episode and work cooperatively and in good faith to address the concerns of all parties." They also said they would "work together to develop the script to ensure an accurate and responsibile depiction of the AIDS problem."

Attending the press conference were Terry Beswick from ACT UP, Ken McPherson from Mobilization Against AIDS, and Renee Durazzo with the San Francisco AIDS Foundation.

Durazzo cautioned, "I think that we have to be highly suspect at this point in terms of what they are going to do. We can't be naive to think that, in making agreements with us, they are necessarily going to follow them. I think at this point we have to be skeptical of what they agree to."

That skepticism was being felt outside San Francisco, as well. Last week a conference call was held between gay and lesbian activists across the country and representatives from both NBC and Lorimar. The sensitivity of the production has been evident by the reluctance of NBC to discuss the program. Their publicity department has issued only general press releases, and NBC community relations director Rosalind Weinman and others involved in working with community activists have been told to be unavailable to the press.

Many AIDS organizations in over a dozen cities in the United States have issued statements condemning the Midnight Caller episode. Following the completion of filming in San Francisco, many organizations are now planning further protest actions across the country against NBC and Lorimar. These groups have stated that efforts will now be made to force stations across the country not to air the episode when it is broadcast. If enough stations refuse to air the show in major markets across the country, it will guarantee the show does not make any money and that it will be a loser in the ratings.

Propositions

Proposition R NO Renegotiate U.S.S. Missouri M.O.U.

This measure would void the city's current commitment to the Navy with regard to the berthing of the Missouri.

Proposition S YES Implement the M.O.U. of the U.S.S. Missouri

This would implement the Memorandum of Understanding that was agreed to by the Navy and allow $2 million (from the port funds) to begin dredging.

Proposition T NO Off-Street Parking Fund Expenditures

This initiative would earmark all parking-meter money for increases in neighborhood parking facilities. As it is now, all monies in excess of $6 million are earmarked for this purpose, and the $6 million goes to our general funds. We can't afford to lose this money (which helps to pay for medical services; i.e., AIDS/ARC funds).

Proposition U NO Vacancy Rent Control

A poorly put-together measure that could damage our rent structure even more.

NO Police Horse Patrol

For sheer arrogance, these cops have no peers.

Proposition W NO Mutual Recognition: Palestinian and Israeli Statehood

We stand by our earlier denunciation of the proposal.

Proposition X YES Operating Expenditures

From Same-Year Revenues Only

This measure, sponsored by the mayor, would allow future city budgets to spend only current revenues. In other words, we must not spend more than we take in. This measure would attempt to maintain a balanced budget.

Proposition Z NO Hetch-Hetchy Power Contracts

This measure would void the agreements reached by this city and Turlock and Modesto Irrigation Districts, as well as PC&E, and instruct the board to implement the "people's right" to Hetch-Hetchy power. In other words, we would take over and municipalize PG&E's distribution facilities.

With an already bloated civil service system that can't function now, can you envision them trying to run an electric utility at the current rates of PC&E? This proposal would also take a guaranteed $28 million a year from the general funds. A poorly considered proposal.

It Was a Time for Shuttle Buses, Gyrating Dancers, and José

Halloween was a time for parties all over the city. Most people in San Francisco's lesbian and gay community wanted to have fun and seem-ed to have chosen their party place with that in mind.

On Saturday night, thousands of people made their way to the Giftcenter for the "Journey to the Center of the Earth." Shuttle buses from several areas of the city provided convenience with more than a little bit of safety.

Bill Camillo, Bobby Moske, and Rod Roderick gave their audience a party that lasted until 4 a.m. For almost two hours, the many people in costume walked the runway. Many were involved in competition, while others were thrilled to show off their cos-came a part of "Jerry's Girls." The bus made its way to over a dozen bars throughout the night.

"It brings fantasy back into our lives. It brings imagination back into our lives. Halloween is wonderful," said Ed Kimball as he marveled at the group arriving at Trax on Haight Street. Diamond John, one of the many on the bus, said, "I really don't ride buses or any kind of public transportation, but this is won-derful."

At Kimo's on Polk Street, they were greeted by Sup. Harry Britt. One of those arriving with the grand ladies of drag was Sup. Carol Ruth Silver. She made most of the journey and was given special acknowledgement at each place the bar stopped.

On Turk Street, the Jerry's Girls group stopped at Scandals, and then made a surprise visit to the Ramshead. To the surprise of many, it served to provide a unity in the many bars where they travelled across town.

NOSTALGIC JOSÉ

Monday night belonged to José Sarria at the Galleon and Sharon McNight at the Eagle. While tens of thousands worked their way through Castro Street, others chose to spend the evening at their favorite gay bar.

It was the annual "Leather and Feathers" night at the Eagle. McNight was the special enter-tainment, giving the huge crowd a solid dose of the McNight sound. The Eagle had its contest, which highlighted its own special kind of drag.

At the Galleon, Sarria and Hazel McGuiness recreated the days of the Black Cat. For most of the evening, the bar was jammed as the people marveled at the still zany routines of José. Over a quarter of a century ago, José used to perform bastardized versions of famous operas at the Black Cat. Last Monday he re-created those moments.

As he always did at the Black Cat, José went into the audience at the conclusion of his performance, hustling tips. Monday night he raked in several hundred dollars and turned it all over to the AIDS Emergency Fund.

At the close of the evening, José completed the nostalgic trip by doing something else he did in the old days. He led the crowd in the singing of "God Save Our Nelly Queens."

They danced their tails off at the Giftcenter.

L-o-n-g Halloween Parties Drag On and On and On

Not Quite So Much Imagination Visible This Year

by Dennis McMillan

Halloween dragged on forever this year, beginning with the Muscle System's pre-Halloween Drag Beauty Pageant on Oct. 22 and ending with last Tuesday morning's 3 a.m. trash collection of the very last beer can and broken string of beads in the deserted streets of the Castro. It was a time for everything from dressing outrageously to meditating somberly to reflecting historically.

On Saturday, a week before Halloween, Muscle System held its annual dragfest benefit, and at the stroke of 11 p.m. the Castro was inundated with literally hundreds of hunky, pumped-up men in every imaginable style of female attire. For many, it was the first time in heels—and it was the first time in heels-and it was

The following Friday, only a few brave souls ventured out in costume, most saving their ener-gy for the l-o-n-g weekend ahead.

But Saturday night brought the girl out in many a boy as he donned his drag and dragged his buns all over the city to participate in the many costume-optional-but-recommended dance parties.

Earlier in the day, Grace Cathedral provided a more contemplative alternative in its Day of Remembrance. It was an opportunity to mediate on and personate the control of tunity to meditate on and personally process the grief of the AIDS epidemic in a variety of ways. Surely the most spectacular event of the day was the procession of Hispanic Day of the Dead cere-mony for "los muertos de SIDA." A long line of participants marched, carrying candles and chrysanthemums to be placed on the altar, decorated with rainbow-colored skulls and Mexican artifacts of mourning.

Monday was the final night of marathon Halloweening. Appar-ently the community was rather fagged out (pun intended) by then, because there just wasn't an abundance of that fabulous creative spirit one saw in bygone

Late-night Castro was an estimated 80 percent noncostumed gawkers. Very few truly outstand-ing costumes graced the gay ghetto this year.

Certainly the most frequently seen attire was modelled after the smash musical play, Phantom of the Opera. It would seem that last year's popular ice-hockey mask that psychopathic Jason sported

("the night he came back home") has been cut in two to make way for this year's half-mask of the phantom. Is this possibly a symbol of our faltering economical status, and will next year cut down to only a quarter of a mask?

There was an unusual amount of costumed folk on stilts in the streets this year. And you thought it was a bitch to walk in those high heels of yours?

Of course, a sign of the times was clearly seen in the multitude of giant condoms walking the streets. Remember when a costume was considered safe because it was fire-retardant?

On a political note, a gigantic releton with a sign saying, "Kill skeleton with a sign saying, "Kill 102," was carried by a team of grim reapers.

The No on 102 skeleton made an appearance on Castro Street Saturday night. oGraphics/Dark

Taking the Pledge

Group Plans to Break the Law If Prop. 102 Passed by Voters

by Dennis McMillan

The Forget-Me-Nots, a group of ten San Francisco gay men of various HIV status, have begun to circulate petitions statewide that pledge the signers to noncompliance with Prop. 102, should it pass. Many Californians are signing the pledge, including such influential people as Dr. Laurens P. White, a San Francisco internist and president of the 34,000 members of the California Medical Association (CMA).

Pledgers promise not to report any names to government offi-cials and not to allow for involun-tary testing of their blood. Others are pledging to publicly support those who refuse to comply with the provisions of Prop. 102.

"Proposition 102 will force us to decide either to turn in the names of people we care about— knowing they could lose their jobs, homes, and health insur-ance—or to break the law," said Forget-Me-Not member Allan Berube. "Many of us who cannot in good conscience expose people living with AIDS, ARC, and HIV to even more hardship and discrimination will be considered criminals after election day if this law passes," he added.

The Forget-Me-Nots evolved last year at the demonstration protesting the U.S. Supreme Court's anti-sodomy Hardwicke decision after the March on Westiert Durie Derivative. Washington. During that event, half the men in the group were arrested in an act of civil disobedience. They decided to form the Forget-Me-Nots, having a common thread among them in their shared grief over lovers or friends lost to AIDS.

They decided to transform their grief into political action, printing up Tshirts with pictures of their deceased lovers and wearing them at the protest as a dramatic visual statement.

Asked as to why the group Asked as to why the group would circulate these petitions before the initiative was voted on, Berube explained, "We think that a lot of voters don't know that if 102 passes, hundreds of thousands of people in the state will be put in the position of having to make the decision of whether to turn in people they care about, knowing that they care about, knowing that they could be discriminated against as a result. This is an effective, timely way to educate voters in ad-

In light of the recent endorsement by Gov. George Deukme-jian of 102, the Forget-Me-Nots feel even more urgency to get signatures. Yoel Kahn, rabbi of Congregation Sha'ar Zahav and activist in the group, said, "Now, more than ever, we need to pre-pare and decide beforehand what action we will take. Our resistance will begin the very moment Prop. 102 passes."

Thus far, the group has collected over 200 signatures and has been circulating forms to be signed at No on 102 rallies and at card tables set up in the Castro. They have sent forms to test-site staff and health care workers statewide.

Dr. White of the CMA boldly stated, "If Prop. 102 passes, I will tear the page out indicating the AIDS virus status of my patients and throw it away."

"I would conveniently forget the name of any person who test-ed positive," said Dr. Bill Owen, a San Francisco internist with over 500 HIV-infected patients.

Reverend James Emerson, a Presbyterian minister in San Francisco, said, "If that law pass-es and I was in that position, I would consider it a morally re-quired act of civil disobedience to violate that part of the law."

The Forget-Me-Nots anticipate a kind of grassroots chain-letter system whereby a person receives a form, duplicates several for his or her circle of friends, and they in turn follow the process to widen the circulation.

Copies of the pledge of noncompliance can be obtained by writing to Pledge/Forget-Me-Nots, 2370 Market St., Box 59, San Francisco, CA 94114. Names of those who have made their pledge will be announced at a later date.

Krim Says Proposition 102 Will Block AIDS Research

In 1981, Dr. Mathilde Krim had lunch with a friend. The friend, Dr. Joseph Sonnabend, had recently opened a practice specializing in venereal diseases of young men. Over lunch, Sonnabend mentioned many of his patients were affected by strange symptoms including swollen lymph nodes and swollen spleens.

A few weeks later, Krim had a conversation with another doctor, a dermatologist working at the Sloan-Kettring Research Center. This doctor mentioned another disease, Kaposi's sarcoma, which as affecting young, gay male pa-

Soon, doctors and researchers began putting together the puz-zle, classifying these immune de-ficiency problems under one label, AIDS. At this time, Krim donated $100,000 to Sonnabend and others who were exploring the roots of this disease. Since the roots of this disease. Since then, Krim has been credited with raising millions of dollars for AIDS research. She is a founder of AmFAR, the Ameri-can Foundation for AIDS Re-search, which to date has award-ed $11 million in startun grants. ed $11 million in start-up grants to over 170 research tean

She has also worked to educate the medical establishment and the general public about the causes and treatment possibilities for AIDS. And, using her connections in New York City's wealthy social nexus, she has enlisted the support of celebrities and philanthropists across the country to aid in the fight against the disease.

"If I had wanted to give a fundraising dinner back in 1982," Krim said, "No one would have come. People were afraid. They were even afraid of me, that I would give them the virus."

Krim is encouraged by the progress she has seen in people's at-titudes toward AIDS. "I think we have had a miracle without even realizing it in this country. In 1982, I was scared that there was going to be a terrible backlash against the gay community. I was afraid the medical world would respond in a non-productive, irrational fashion. But this has not happened, because, fortunately, people have given thought and studied the situation and, for the most part, have come to the right conclusions," she said.

Krim visited California last week to speak out against Prop. 102. "102 is not just a California problem," Krim believes. "11's a symptom of a larger lack of understanding and of viciousness that exists agross the country. that exists across the country. There are people all over the country who are watching this, and wishing the same sort of thing could be done where they live."

Krim believes that if Prop. 102 is successful, it will have lasting implications, not only on AIDS care in California, but on our society as a whole. "It will result in a deteriorating quality of life in our country. We will have a society where one can point the finger at someone and make them lose their job. There will be a free-for-all on gays, drug users prostitutes, and, generally, on people you don't like."

Like many others, Krim also predicts that Prop. 102 would ac-tually facilitate the spread of the virus. "So far, gay men have been good patients, helpful patients. Once they have been educated about the transmission of the disease, the rate of new infection has slowed to almost zero. If this (Prop. 102) passes, we will see more violence, more abuses, suicides and people in despair.

"Also, some of these people They will no longer want to be helpful. We will see patients shooting their doctors. We are going to see things like this," predicted Krim.

"We are going to need people to enroll in drug trials by the thousands;" Krim said, "and if 102 passes, people will be scared to enroll. It will delay treatment and research by years."

Krim believes firmly that peo-ple can be educated to do the right thing about AIDS. She has right thing about AIDS. She has spent the past four years educating people about the facts of transmission, and says that once people have understood those facts, they have become much more understanding and compassionate toward people with the disease.

"AIDS may have existed for 15 years before we were even aware of it," she said, "so there is no distinction between innocent and not innocent people. They are all innocent, because nobody knew what was happening."

If Prop. 102 passes, Krim said, our educational efforts will be pushed back. "Any wedge into our collective sense of solidarity hurts us in our fight against AIDS," she said. "The whole country is graping for a way to AIDS," she said. "The whole country is groping for a way to handle this situation. The direction we have taken so far has been successful. If it's not broke, don't

Mathilde Krim

Krim said that as a mother and grandmother, she looks ahead to the next ten years and wonders where AIDS will take our society. "I don't want my grandchildren to be ashamed of me, of this country, or the society they grow up in," she said.

Hsieh

Tom Hsieh was a leader in authoring legislation to create a Medical Advisory Committee to study the feasibility of a two-tier ambulance response system in San Francisco, and provide an ongoing review of data to constantly improve our ambulance response times and the work of the Emergency Medical Services

Hsieh supports homeporting the Missouri. There are significant and important community concerns opposing this position. However, his support comes from his belief in the positive expan-sion of job opportunities and tax revenue benefits for all San Franciscans.

Hsieh voted to support an un-conditional welcome for the Olympic Games in 1996. He believes the Bay Area would en-joy and benefit from the worldwide attention and status asso-ciated with hosting such a prestigious event. Further, he trusted his experience and busi-ness judgement in believing that first we commit the Olympic Games to the Bay Area, then we negotiate the important human rights issues.

Lempert Endorses Ban on Prejudice

Running for 20th Assembly Seat Against Conservative Duplissea

by Marv. Shaw

Putting his first campaign for elective office on the high road of political reform, Ted Lempert is mindful of issues important to his gay constituents of the 20th Assembly Dis-trict. The district encompasses the north-central peninsula from Millbrae to Menlo Park, including much of the coast-side.

Foremost in his concerns are issues involving AIDS. Lempert, a 27-year-old lawyer with a San Francisco practice specializing in business concerns, comes on strong for increased state funding to combat the epidemic. He urges that the recommendations urges that the recommendations of the Presidential Commission on AIDS be followed. He favors guarding carefully against all forms of discrimination against AIDS victims

Citing the dangers of the creation of a "climate of fear and discrimination" in the AIDS crisis, Lempert stressed the vital role of education in maintaining civil rights and rational treatment. Be-cause improvement of education statewide is another of his prime objectives, the Democratic candidate sees instruction on AIDS, both in the public schools and the populace generally, as vital. In both arenas he would like to see the medical community issue guidelines that include the use of condoms.

Lempert is strongly opposed to Prop. 102.

Because child care is also high on his priorities list, Lempert's attitudes toward gay men and les-bians conducting child care and being foster or adoptive parents are relevant. His response was that the quality person should be the primary standard and that equal rights principles should prevail in such employment.

Dominant in Lempert's cam-paign thrust is his passion for political reform. Imbued with this concern since his association with Arlen Gregorio, who was himself dedicated to such changes when he served in the Assembly in the late 1970s, Lempert decries the campaign expense which puts a candidate under obligation to special interests and at the mercy of lobbyists once elected.

'The Witches of EastOak' Was a Smash

DELIRIOUS DALLIANCE
(A Totally Enthralled Nose)

All too often when a production starts way later than the advertised time, the audience—especially me—tends to judge each and every performance on a ratio of just how late the production started.

"The Witches of EastOak" (A Sienna Productions) at Bella Napoli last Saturday night, was an exception to this general rule. It was slated to begin at 9 p.m., but when that "earlier than bewitching hour" arrived, it was obvious that there were far too few in the audience to warrant the overture. The 15 or so of us waited patiently until something happened.

Gradually the show lounge/disco area of Bella Napoli began to fill up, and the impatient pacing of the performers (as observed through the windowed was doing, but also each performer proved that he/she had rehearsed, practiced, prepared, drilled, recapitulated, tautologized, and rehearsed again and again. They did indeed have, as Gallagher says, "STYLE."

Never before has lip-sync and pantomime and gesturing and acting and reacting been brought to such a fine point of entertaining. Many a "would-be performer" (some of whom are "on the boards" today) would truly benefit from exposure to such a fine group. Tiffany, Brandy, Ava, and CoCo were part of the original "Espree;" so that might have something to do with the total professionalism of the truly fine evening of entertainment.

A very impressive total of $700 was raised from door charges, entertainers' tips, and passing the empty Halloween pumpkin. However, this particular show and its talent and genius, if you will, so impressed one spectator that he donated $1,000 on the spot! (I don't know if Marv has told Sam yet, but he should have!) East Bay Assistance Fund is the grateful recipient of the $1,700, and each member of its board and all those who are helped most sincerely thank Sienna Productions and all the Witches of EastOak.

The next time you see any advertisement promoting any creation from Sienna Productions, run, don't walk, to the nearest ticket counter and get your reservations in early...because, to me, SIENNA stands for:

Flea Mart Raises $10K For Sonoma Group

The Village Inn, in Monte Rio along the Russian River, was the site of a Fun Faire Flea Market Oct. 22 and 23, which drew over 1,000 people and brought in over $10,000. The proceeds from the event went to Face to Face, the Sonoma County AIDS Network, which provides assistance to local people with AIDS.

Over 150 local merchants donated prizes, dinners, lodgings, gift certificates, and much more valued at over $6,000. Some of the items were put up for silent auction and others were raffled or won on the Wheel of Fortune, which was very popular. Many of the silent auction items, which consisted of lodgings on the Russian River, went to people who came up for the event from San Francisco.

The grand auction item, a Kamasura Moped, was bought by a woman from San Francisco. The grand raffle item was also a Kamasura Moped, won by a lucky local. Both were kindly donated by Weavers and Dreamers of Duncans Mills.

One of the highlights of the benefit was the donation of a $500 check by the exclusive Bohemian Club, which holds its summer encampments in Monte Rio's Bohemian Grove. According to Face to Face volunteer Gary Wilk, Grove superintendent Jerry Dahl was approached with a request for a donation. Dahl conveyed the request to the club's directors.

"We did want to do something," said Bohemian volunteer coordinator Dick Arnold. "We didn't have anything appropriate to give so we donated cash."

to give so we donated cash."

The benefit was held as a memorial to the late Rev. Rick Dubois, who died Sept. 10. He received assistance from Face to Face until his death. His close friend, Gary Wilt, felt that this benefit would be a good way to help get over the grief of his loss and also help others. "I feel that others who have lost loved ones to this disease should organize and have more benefits for groups or agencies who support AIDS victims, and their loved ones," said

It was a flea market, all right.

Wilt.

Face to Face grew out of a strong and involved community spirit. In the summer of 1984, in recognition of a growing community need, a small group of individuals organized a weekly forum intended to provide support for people confronting AIDS. In 1985, Face to Face was given nonprofit status and has grown into a widely recognized, charitable service organization.

In 1987, Face to Face was chosen to conduct a pilot research project for the state of California. This study expects to demonstrate that in-home health care is more effective than hospitalization in meeting the health care needs of persons living with AIDS or ARC.

Face to Face must rely almost entirely on community support to provide the direct care needs of persons with AIDS/ARC and day to day operational expenses.

This event just shows what a small community can do when all people work together for the good of others.

Envy, spite, and resentment notwithstanding, jealousy is jealousy. Shame on those who expressed same about that $1,000 donation going to an organization other than their own. Perhaps if they had the talent—and upfrontness—of Sienna Productions, who knows???

MacTown Strip

S.F. Filmmaker Returns to Tennessee and Discovers a Community He Missed

by Matthew Ogden

ey, there, what y'all doin' out here on the strip tonight?"

"Just driving around, trying to meet women."

"Trying to pick up guys."

"Do you know who you're talking to? We're lesbians."

"No, you're not."

"The hell we're not. Ain't we so lesbians?"

You might expect to here this dialogue outside Francine's or Code Blue or at the corner of Castro and Market. Yet it was spoken on the strip outside McMinnville, Tennessee, population 2,000.

Imagine it. You are a young, independent filmmaker, raised in a small Tennessee community, who lives in San Francisco but have returned to your home town armed with your video camera and an intense desire to capture the essence of that town: why you left it, why others stayed behind. Such was the scenario for Bill Smartt, a 25-year-old performance artist who—along with his lover/collabortor Mark Misrock—formed the team of MacTown Strip in 1984 in Atlanta.

The McMinnville Strip dialogue introduces one of the videotaped segments of We're Not There Now, a multimedia event which mixes live performance, live music, shadow imagery and overhead projection effects, video interviews, and sound sculptures in an effort to "explore our generation." When he speaks of "our generation," Mis-rock specifically addresses those who have come of age since the turbulent 1960s: that generation of TV junkies, media-wise but politically apathetic, materialistic and living with the knowledge that we could all be annihilated at any minute, who both anger and evoke sympathy from Mark Misrock and Bill Smartt.

acTown Strip's goal is to give its audience a different way to think about that theater known as life. At the same time, however, they consider themselves an "audienceoriented performance team." For every experimental, less-accessible piece, there is a piece which is firmly rooted in reality and is readily accessible for the mainstream audience.

One such piece is the lesbian video interview already described. When planning-this segment, Smartt had intended to try and capture the particularly American, small-town phenomenon of "cruising"—not the Castro or South of Market bar-scene version, but the version practiced by thousands of teenagers who are old enough to drive, vote, and be drafted, but are neither old enough to drink legally nor able—either for lack of money or simply a lack of better diversions—to pursue other leisure-time activities.

Instead, they spend their evenings "cruising the strip" of fastfood chains, 7-lls and gas stations which lie on the outskirts of town. What Smartt hadn't bargained on was meeting a carload of lesbians who were both gay and proud and living in McMinnville.

They are refreshingly eager and willing to talk about themselves ("I'm small but brave, 95 pounds that won't stand back for any motherfucker") and their oppression ("We get harassed, but we like what we do, so we don't care..."). In addition, they introduced Smartt to an aspect of his home town he'd never known existed the entire time he lived there.

Dubbed "Queer Corner" by the locals, it is that spot on the cruising strip across from the Firestone store where the gay men and lesbians park and socialize, drink, and philosophize. One woman describes the first time she realized that there were other lesbians in McMinnville and that they congregated at Queer Corner: "I figured homosexuals in McMinnville were like roaches: They only came out at night."

night."

The "Queer Corner Girls," as this piece became known, is only one segment of We're Not There Now. Dialogue from children's records provides the basis for a live-performance segment aimed at forcing us to reexamine some of the seemingly harmless socialization tools used to mold children into adults. Top-40 tunes from the 1970s take on an oppressiveness in the face of seeming melody. A fast-food worker slips into hysteria as the day wears on. Such segments force the audience to think about the theater they are watching and not merely be passively entertained as if they were attending a road-show revival of The King and I.

e're Not There Now is a response to "living in a bubble," which is how Smartt describes the deceptively calm and accepting climate in which San Franciscans live. An earlier project, The Class of '86: This Year's Crop, burst that buble once and for all. Smartt and Misrock were allowed to videotape an all-night "lock-in" for a ob Epstein's office, which he shares with Richard Schmeiken, isn't like one you normally associate with a person who has won an Academy Award. It is large and airy and computer clean, but it is also sparse, unlike that of some Hollywood mogul.

Nevertheless, when the afternoon sun warms the office, it also allows Rob's Oscar, which he won for The Times of Harvey Milk, to glisten. The Oscar provides a certain warmth for the entire gay and lesbian community.

For some, Oscar represents a symbol of excellence in filmmaking. For Epstein, it represents a quick trip up the professional ladder of filmmaking. But Robhasn't forgotten how he got to the first rung of the ladder.

"I started working with Peter Adair on Word Is Out as assistant editor while I was taking some film courses at S.F. State," said Epstein. "When I was working on Word Is Out, I thought it was something that would make a difference in the world. I haven't really considered any other path. I've been drawn to projects because of content, not any commercial stuff."

Epstein realizes that this line of thought isn't the way to gain fame and riches. "I pretty much live from hand to mouth," he says. "People haven't been knocking down our doors. We still have to generate projects."

Nevertheless, Epstein glows with satisfaction over one thing. "The Academy Award, the Oscar, gave us credibility, Richard Schmeicken, my partner, and Debbie Hoffman."

redibility means quality, and some observers feel the gay and lesbian community has gained that credibility, and not just because of the Epstein/Schmeicken/Hoffman Oscar. Daniel Mangin, who teach-valid medium."

Apparently Frameline patrons aren't the only folks thinking of gay video as a valid medium. Rob Epstein recalls a reaction to The Times of Harvey Milk: "We got a letter from a young girl in Kansas who said she had just watched the film with her parents. After it was over, her father got up and made a phone call to her brother, who was gay and had been estranged from the family since he came out. And the father invited him home for Christmas with his lover. The young woman thanked us for bringing her family back together.

"And that," said Rob Epstein,

"is what Harvey Milk was all about."

That theme has personally carried over for Epstein. "I've worked on network TV and had no problems," he said. "When I went to interview with the executive producer on the series on the Constitution, We the People with Peter Jennings, she said that she saw the projects I worked on were gay and was she supposed to read something into that. But she dropped it, and I got the job."

when people like Rob Epstein win Oscars and work on shows with people like Peter Jennings, that means more respect for the gay and lesbian community. And it also allows for more messages to get out to the public.

"I'm doing a documentary saluting lesbians and what women have done for the gay man. It's called Family Values," said John Canalli, formerly of Frameline and Gay Cable Network. "It's to show that our family means as Canalli emphasized his point by adding that he had sold a documentary about AIDS agencies to Australian television last year. "It's called Heroism: A Community Response," he said. It's an overview of the nonprofit AIDS agencies that have sprung up to take care of people with AIDS and also to inform people of information they need to sustain their lives."

It is this beautiful dichotomy that carries life onward. As the great poet and handpressman, William "Brother Antoninus" Everson, would say, "The mystery is true." The mystery, in this case, is about being gay in a straight world.

Since moving from Atlanta to San Francisco in 1986, MacTown Strip has produced two audio tapes, Mark and Bill's Greatest Hits and Hectafat, in addition to their multimedia shows. While they have no intention of leaving the Bay Area in the near future, they would like to be able to take their shows on the road and travel in search of still-wider audience acceptance and exposure. SÜLEIMAN THE MAGNIFICENT uleiman the Magnificent, ruler of the Ottoman Em-pire from 1520 to 1566, was born around 1495. He was quiet and sensitive and loved poetry and music. He had a long, thin body which he carried gracefully, a delicate complexion, and long, thin hands

In his adolescence, Suleiman's father gave him a Greek slave

Ibrahim was two years older than Suleiman and was tall, with dark, curly hair and a solid, muscular curly hair and a solid, muscular body. The two men shared many interests, often discussing reli-gion and philosophy. Ibrahim never left the prince's side, and it was common knowledge that Ib-rahim shared the prince's bed.

When Suleiman became the tenth sultan of the house of Ostenth sultan of the house of Usman, he made Ibrahim his grand vizir, or head of the imperial council. Later, Ibrahim was also named head of the army, making him second only to Suleiman, who had no real desire to rule. Ibrahim's new-found power cormutal his values and he soon rupted his values, and he soon rejected some of Suleiman's most cherished ideas.

In 1534, hearing a rumor that Ibrahim was plotting to take over the empire, Suleiman summoned Ibrahim to dinner. After eating, the two went to the sultan's bedroom. The next morning, slaves found the walls streaked with blood and Ibrahim's naked body, which had been strangled with a bowstring, lying face down on the bed. Suleiman refused to allow the walls to be cleaned, and the stains remained until his death.

QUEEN ANNE

orn on Feb. 6, 1665, Anne grew up lonely and love-starved. In her portraits she appears to have been plain, large-boned, and overweight. Anne was fairly intelligent and politically astute, but the one great drive in her life seems to have been her need for affection.

In 1683, Anne married George, prince of Denmark. The royal couple produced 17 children, none of whom survived to adulthood. In the year she married, Anne found the love she had been looking for. She met Sarah Churchill, the future duchess of Marlborough, a woman of great beauty and a fiery temper.

When Anne became the ruler of England following the death of her brother-in-law William in 1702, she appointed Sarah officer of the stole. One of Sarah's duties was to attend the queen's bedchamber

Sarah was ambitious and became involved in politics, often disagreeing with her lover. When Sarah grew tired of having her views ignored, she left the court. Anne was extremely upset by Sarah's departure and begged her to return, but Sarah stubbornly refused and vacated her apartment in St. James Palace, taking doorknobs and mantlepieces with her. This beating left a lasting psychological scar on Lawrence. He wondered how it might affect his relationship with Dahoum, but he never found out. During his absence, his lover died of typhus.

illa Cather was born in Virginia in 1873 and grew up in Red Cloud, Nebraska. She rebelled at an early age against her surround-ings. Her family was tolerant of her behavior, thinking it was only a phase.

Their tolerance was strained, however, when she asked to be called William. She further procained winiam. She futther pro-claimed in her high school year-book that her form of amusement was vivisection and that the greatest wonder in the world was a goodlooking woman.

At the University of Nebraska, At the University of Nebraska, Willa discovered writing, but soon decided she needed the excitement and the intellectual stimulation of a large city. She chose to live in Pittsburgh, where she met the first great love of her life, Isabelle McClung, the daughter of a prominent Pittsburgh family.

Feeling constrained by the dullness of life in Pittsburgh, Cather accepted the offer of a position at McClure's magazine in New York. Isabelle begged Cather to stay, and Cather begged Isabelle to join her in New York. Isabelle could not imagine leaving her home so Cather left for ing her home, so Cather left for New York alone in 1905.

Just after her arrival in New York, Cather met Edith Lewis,

Superb 'Ex' Cartoon Shows How The Republicans Look at AIDS

Media Watch

by Will Snyder

For some folks in this community, the countdown is in progress. As of this date, it is 78 days until Ronald Reagan abdicates. If it weren't for George Bush, this statistic would be similar to a kid counting the hours until Christmas. Barring a miracle, it looks as if the president's legacy will continue.

And what a legacy! For gay people Ronald Reagan has been a kiss of death worse than Tommy Udo, the cynical killer Richard Widmark made famous four decades ago in the movie Kiss of Death.

The biggest four-letter word of this decade has been "AIDS" and Reagan has made it a point not to make it a point. He didn't publicly utter the word until 1986. He constantly cut Congressional suggestions for money to fight the disease. He ignored his own AIDS Commission when it talked of compassion for the people with the disease. When he gave his last State of the Union address last January and said he wanted to talk about some of the problems in America, he failed to talk about AIDS.

For all Ronnie Reagan knows, Priscilla Lane is probably still a starlet at Warner Brothers. The moon is made of green cheese. And, Jack Armstrong is still the Aaaalll American Boy.

And yet, America forgives this fraud of a human being. It laughs with him. It approves of his genial genocide.

Never could the horror of Ronald Reagan be caught better than it was on Oct. 12 in the San Francisco Examiner. Cartoonist David Wiley didn't give us a caption, but he didn't need to. He drew us a map of America, put in patches instead of states and dubbed it "AIDS Quilt."

And then off in the corner of the land where Washington, D.C. is supposed to be, he drew the president fast asleep. The cartoon is a gem and the hope here is that Will Hearst will push it hard for a Pulitzer.

According to the 37-year-old Wiley, the cartoon expresses his personal disgust with Reagan's Randy Morrison (I.), producer of the record No Condom, No Sex, presented a letter of intent to William Freeman (r.), director of Institutional Affairs for the National AIDS Network, assigning all artist and producer royalties from the sale of the record to his organization. handling of the AIDS crisis.

"At the time I drew the cartoon, the Quilt was in Washington again and I felt I had to show my general disgust with the Reagan Administration," he said. "He ignored his own (AIDS Commission) panel when they came back with suggestions. His whole attitude has been deplorable."

The fact that Wiley came out with such a strong statement against the president might surprise some people in the gay community. At least that's the way Wiley looks at the situation.

"I got some gay people angry in the first weeks of the Agnos Administration because I criticized the mayor for showing favoritism to the gay community," he said. "And I believe he did show favoritism. "But I am an independent thinker," Wiley added, "and I think Reagan has been wrong in his handling of AIDS. I wish some of my critics would say something nice about this cartoon. It's certainly something I believe in."

The cartoon deserves applause. It should be remembered, too, for awards and maybe more. Perhaps some folks, hopefully many folks, will clip out the cartoon and take it to the polls on Nov. 8 and remember their friends when they pull down the levers in the voting booth.

It would be a fitting way to say good bye to Ronnie and his pal George.

Spanish AIDS Play on Channel 54

SAN JOSE—SIDA Is AIDS, an hour-long documentary airing on San Jose public television Wednesday, Nov. 9, at 10 p.m., takes a compelling and compassionate look at the problem of AIDS in America's Hispanic community.

In Spanish, AIDS is known as "SIDA" or sindrome de immunodeficiencia adquirida.

A straightforward narrative of how certain individuals and their families have been touched by the AIDS epidemic, SIDA Is AIDS looks at the lives and struggles of four AIDS victims in New Jersey, Miami, and Los Angeles. These cities were chosen because they typify the diverse Hispanic community in America and because they reflect the highest rates of AIDS among Hispanics.

In New Jersey, SIDA is AIDS introduces Rino, a recovered intravenous drug user, his wife, and one-year-old daughter. Rino's story emphasizes the impact of AIDS on the family and explores the physical and psycho-social needs of family members when AIDS strikes.

In Miami, the documentary presents Roberto, who contracted AIDS through homosexual contact. Rejected and abandoned by his friends and family, Roberto has created an extended family through his volunteer work at various AIDS agencies.

The Los Angeles portion of SIDA Is AIDS focuses on two different victims of AIDS: Olga and Carmen. Olga has contracted the AIDS virus from her husband, an IV drug user, and passed it along to her youngest child. Her story, like Rino's in New Jersey, shows the effect of AIDS on a young family.

Carmen, diagnosed as HIV-positive, contracted the virus from her bisexual husband. Her story shows the Hispanic community's attitudes toward AIDS, attitudes which are profoundly influenced by the community's religion.

SIDA Is AIDS is narrated by former Univision News anchor Teresa Rodriguez. It is produced by KCET/Los Angeles and Sylvan Productions and funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The documentary is in English.

Russian Jewels in Ballet Tights

he Russians were back. The third Moscow-based ballet troupe to tour the Bay Area during the past 18 months, the Moscow Classical Ballet arrived at the Orpheum with four dozen dancers, a handful of musicians, and the campiest production of Swan Lake since La Scala brought the Franco Zeffirelli/Rosella Hightower version in the summer of 1986. The Moscow is said to be or 1900. The Moscow is said to be the youngest in both age and outlook of all the Soviet ballet companies, and it also boasts a number of young competition prize-winning dancers, plus a quartet of guest stars, including the great Bolshoi ballerina Ekaterina Maximova

The Moscow's Swan Lake libretto and choreography were not a drastic departure from the Soviet versions we've seen during the post-Glasnost tours, and the dancing ranged from competent to exciting. What made it so to exciting. What made it so campy were British designer Tim Goodchild's sets and costumes, so lavish and overdone they could have been seen from a zeppelin. And then there were the dramatic elements, which on opening night were broad enough to play in the Trockadero Ballet.

The opening night swan queen, Odette, was played by Alla Khaniashvili, a guest artist from the Bolshoi who plowed through the lyrical lakeside scene as though she were already thinking about the "black swan" pas de though she were already thinking about the "black swan" pas de deux coming up in the next act. When she actually appeared as Odile, the black swan, she seemed much more at home, cutting her crocodile eyes and turning so many pirouettes I thought she might bore a hole right through the stage. With her long neck, prominent chin, and wide, overpainted lips, Khaniashvili drew the broadest caricature I've seen in a serious Swan Lake.

haniashvili's partner, Alexander Gorbatsevich, was a wan Prince Zieg-fried in what L.A. Times critic Donna Perlmutter called the "callow-effete tradition." He looked much too weak to defy his mother by preferring to marry the swan queen instead of one of the lovely princesses the queen mother had in mind for him. But Gorbatsevich was a fine, sensitive partner, constantly rescuing Khaniashvili from the perils of her own reckless attack.

As the queen mother, Svetlana Voskresenskaya, decked out in Goodchild's outrageous ward-robe, invested her mime scenes with a histrionic fervor that look-ed part Auntie Mame and part Mommie Dearest. The dominent mother angle of Swan Lake has never been so pronounced nor so unintentionally amusing.

The orchestra, underrehears ed, dynamically unbalanced, and frequently conducted at what seemed unusually fast or slow tempi, had improved by the end of the run. But there was no remedy for the size of the Orpheum's stage, and the dancers looked as cramped when they danced Act II without its set—which was struck and packed away before the Sunday afternoon divertissement performance—as they were amid the swank of Goodchild's settings on opening night.

The opening night performance was said to be heavily "papered" in order to guarantee a nearly full house. Perhaps it was the initial reviews, which ranged from lukewarm to scathing, or the trom lukewarm to scatning, or the whopping ticket price ($45 for orchestra) which accounted for the small house—two-thirds empty—at the final divertisseempty—at the final diversisse-ment performance, the only such performance that was scheduled during the company's San Fran-cisco engagement. But as is so often the sad case in local promotion errors, that last performance was the one to see.

pening with the second scene (lakeside white act) of Swan Lake, the final program included a divertissement of nine classical excerpts, closing with the "Adam and Eve" act of Creation of the World act of Creation of the World. Without its set, danced in front of the diaphanous white curtain of the diaphanous white curtain so often used in Russia for diver-tissement programs, the white act lacked atmosphere. But Galina Shlyapina gave to the role of Odette the lyricism and ampli-tude that had been missing on opening night.

It was during the divertisse-ment section of the program that the Moscow company presented the kind of dancing most Ameri-cans associate with Russian ballet. Two duets and a grand pas de deux preceded six assorted codas from classical pas de deux, in essence showing us every leading couple in the company doing their best tricks in rapid succession. To mass together this many highlights—one finale after another—is a peculiarly Russian conceit, like a crash course in virtuoso ballet technique. It's almost too much of a good thing, but much of the technique we saw was truly thrilling, and the com pany revealed that it possessed far more talent than one would guessed after seeing only the full-length Swan Lake

Outstanding among the men were Ilgiz Galimullin, whose huge, traveling jumps consumed so much space he nearly landed so much space he nearly landed in the orchestra pit on more than one occasion. Twenty-year-old Vladimir Malakhov has so much technical ability—a big jump, dazzling turns, and an extremely supple, beautifully proportioned, and finely articulated body and finely articulated body—that one forgets his slightly immature presence. I liked Tatiana Paly in the Don Quixote grand pas de deux and in the coda of Grand Pas Classique. In the Harlequinade coda, Svetlana Kubaswa and Andrei Kudelin were so sova and Andrei Kudelin were so charming they made me long to see the whole pas de deux. And all these costumes were beautiful.

hadn't expected much from Ekaterina Maximova, the famed Bolshoi ballerina who will turn 50 next year. But Maximova looks more astonish-ingly youthful at 49 than any ballerina I've ever seen; only her intensity and self-possession belie her age. In every other aspect, from her happy, unlined face to her strong, lean body, very visible under a thin white unitard, Maxi-mova looked like a teenager.

Maurice Bejart's Romeo and Juliet duet was the fairly trashy piece Maximova appeared in. To music by Berlioz, the choreography modulates between sentimental lyricism and gymnastically erotic partnering. But Maximova invested her entire Maximova invested her entire being into it, creating a kind of transcendent performance that elevated its material in the pro-cess. She didn't seem to care that her West Coast debut was being performed before a small audience any more than we cared that she was dancing a Bejart duet.

The closing "Adam and Eve" from Creation of the World, choreographed by company co-directors Natalya Kasatkina and directors Natalya Kasatkina and Vladimir Vasilyov, is set to forget-table symphonic jazz music by Andrei Petrov. The movement is showy and sensual, with a heavy-handed comedic touch that struck as particularly Russian in character. But the audience rose to a standing ovation on the strength of the company's goodnatured and generous perfor-

ne of the basic rules of theatregoing is that "You pays your money, you takes your chances." That's because, no matter how solid a reputation any production may achieve, many pieces of theatre are aimed to hit an intellectual mark which lies miles above the lowest common denominator. If you want the lowest common denominator, it you want the lowest common denominator, there's plenty of crap to be seen on network television. If you want something more stimulating, you'd better get used to taking risks.

Unfortunately, not every exer-Unfortunately, not every exercise in risk-taking brings the artistic rewards one anticpates. Sometimes, a show can receive tons of media hype, get rave reviews from the press and yet, rather astonishingly, continue to disappoint its audiences. This happens most often when a work of rather small dramatic importance (Andrew Lloyd Webber's Phantom of the Opera) or obscure symbolism (anyone for Harold Pinter?) gets touted as the greatest thing since the invention of the wheel. of the wheel.

As a professional critic, I occasionally find myself in the curious position of reviewing a work which, though many might work which, though many might swoon with ecstasy in attempting to categorize its artisitic merits, leaves me absolutely, unremit-tingly stone cold. I suppose that the easy way out of such an embarassing situation would be to join in the chorus of hosannas and make sure that I screamed "Bravo" as loud as the person sitting next to me. I call that the "est" experience in the arts which, crudely translated, means that as long as you paid for the experience, you'd damned well better believe you're gonna "get Comedienne Anna Russell loved to mock those serious music lectures which used to be given by music critics for the further by music critics for the further enlightenment of other music critics. Alas, I've never been good at following the crowd and, having been cursed with a Joe-Bob Briggs sensitivity to some of the more elusive rewards of "great art," I'd just just as soon be honest and fess up to the fact that a certain work's popular appeal totally eludes me.

Sometimes that means having

Sometimes that means having the balls to say that I think a highly-acclaimed work of art is a whopping piece of shit or that, despite an overwhelming chorus of media approval, we may be dealing with a case of the Emperor's new clothes. But, like performing fellatio through a dark and dimly-lit gloryhole, it's a dark and dirty job. And some-one's got to do it.

YOU CALL THIS FUNNY?

he best example I could think of this phenomenon involves a performance art piece called Les Petits Pas which was recently presented by the Compagnie Jerome Deschamps at Scotland's prestigious Edinburgh Festival. The marketing material said "Hysterically funny and touching at the same time, Jermome Deschamps, 38-year-old writer and director often com-pared to Jacques Tati or Groucho Marx, has set this piece in an old people's home where the inmates resist the tyrannical rule of the farcical caretakers. The residents are all played by entertainers of yesteryear who have come out of retirement to take part. It is full of golden-oldie songs like 'Plaisir d'Amour' and has been a huge hit in Paris.''

"I've always wanted to put on a show that would pay homage to people overtaken by old age," claims Jerome Deschamps. "Despite their wrinkles and their miseries, they want to sing love songs, and I find this wonderful."

A critic from Le Figaro was quoted as saying that "Of all theatre shows, this is one of the funniest, most original and daring that we have a support of the that we have ever seen.

Not so. Contrary to media hype, Les Petits Paswas an appalling unfunny spectacle: a loathsomely bad piece of theatre which was poorly conceived, abominably staged and then shoved down an audience's throat with the kind of fradulent hype are might expect from a used are. with the kind of fradulent hype one might expect from a used car dealer (as opposed to the pro-ducers of a major international arts festival). The slapstick humor and cheap sight gags employed by Deschamps in his creation weren't the slightest bit funny. And, despite the fact that their voices are now mere shadows of what they might once snatows of what they might once have been during their previous professional lives, the geriatric members of the show's cast dog-gedly kept on singing with what little dignity they could muster under the circumstances.

As a result, Les Petits Pas turned out to be one of the most pathetically embarrassing ex-amples I've ever encountered of a stage director/playwright humiliating his actors by asking them to perform his own par-ticular brand of shit. While it's true that, as they say, "Shit hap-pens," Eilleen Heckart once told us (in Butterflies Are Free) that "Diarrhea's a part of real life, but I wouldn't choose to pay for it as entertainment."

My sentiments exactly.

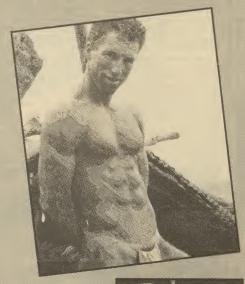

RAKING IT IN

Before I go on to describe the San Francisco Opera's revival of The Rake's Progress, I should make it clear that previous exposures to Stravinsky's thinly-written opera have left me total-ly cold. Although core constraints ly cold. Although some opera he madness is over. Halloween came and went and in this town, the one-day celebration was a five-day marathon for more than a few. Actually, last Thursday night, 27 Oct., the S.F. Eagle staged its annual pumpkin carving contest. The two categories (funniest and scariest) were equally represented by some 20 entries each. There were a lot of talented "carvers" on hand, and in lieu of judges this year, manager Terry Thompson let the big audience decide. A young man visiting here from London tied with the Venezuelian Bombshell "Oly" for the funniest, and a very serious young man took the scariest $50 prize.

Sometime during the week, the E.T. video came out, and several queens deserted their costume-making chores to stand in lines to get a copy. Warren Cave celebrated his birthday at that German gourmet restaurant on Market Street on Friday, and on Saturday night with his lover Jerry and Bobby Wong, they took the overall grand prize at the Giftcenter competition, and the costumes were clever, goregous, cute, with lots of cavemen, cavewomen, prehistoric creatures, and even a Wizard of Oz group. Sunday, the "mask" and "hood" freaks turned out in disappointing numbers at Dreamland's grab at a piece of the action—there were more chacha types in attendance than leather, masks, and hoods. Nice turnout at Esta Noche Saturday night for their competition, and the Barbary Coasters' "Neewollah" beer bust Sunday at the

S.F. Eagle got a huge crowd that scarfed up the beer.

Monday was festive at the Troc, and Castro was 75 percent straight and 25 percent gay with all the gawkers jamming the street, which was closed off at 1600 hours. Monday night, the big crowd was at the S.F. Eagle for the annual Leather & Feathers party. Ass't. Mgr. David Stoll looked dashing in his Russian Prince costume, while manager Terry Thompson let Dorothy Duster make him up in a really great drag set-up. The entire Eagle staff was in costume, and Sharon McNight had the crowd enraptured, entertaining the troops and joining Jim Anderson, Dick Manley, and Jerry Vallaire as judges. It was righteous camp and circumstance throughout the evening, with award-winning You've got to hand it to all the men and women who really went all out in the costume department this year. The Jerry's Girls bus was a big hit all over, and the Silver Strip costume party was real fun from all reports. Sorry I don't have enough room to name the winners of all the competitions, but the most notable ones tions, but the most notable ones were the Wizard of Oz group at the Giftcenter, and Warren Cave's group with the peacock feathers was absolutely flawless. One of the Balloon Girls (Doug), dressed as a boy, won for the best in theme at the Eagle, with one Ms. Ducacas winning for humor, and the trio of cavemen winning again for best group. After they won, it was renamed the best group of butts!

I heard no reports of violence against the gays and lesbians, ex-cept for the usual jealous lover scenes. Why can't these people go out and have fun instead of fighting in public over stupid jealousy

Actually, I was inundated with press releases for this edition, but putting this column out this week putting this column out this week is a chore in itself after MCing at the Eagle on Monday night, and here it is Tuesday morning. I will tell you that there is a beer bust at the S.F. Eagle on Saturday night, Nov. 5, from 1900-2200 for $10 for Bruce Lilienthal (candidate for the Bd. of Supes). Artificial Insemination and the Unmarried Woman

As single parenting and parenting in the gay community have increased, so has the popularity of artificial insemination. Yet the legal world has been slow to adapt to this phenomenon, and there is little definitive legal information available to women considering artificial insemination. Most literature previously available on this subject addresses married women, donor banks, and physiciansupervised insemination. However, because most physicians will not inseminate single women, and because of the relatively simple nature of the procedure, many unmarried women are choosing to inseminate themselves. Artificial Insemination and the Unmarried Woman: Legal Rights and Responsibilities is a self-help guide addressing legal issues of concern to these women, and to males considering donating sperm.

Prepared by an attorney, this easy-to-read text discusses the legalities of do-it-yourself insemination, the pros and cons of the use of anonymous versus known donors, and paternity rights, such as custody, visitation, and child support. Guidance is given to women who wish to totally exclude the sperm donor from any involvement with the child's upbringing, those who wish to share joint custody of the child with the sperm donor (or with him and his same-sex family), and those who wish the sperm donor to have only a carefully limited role in the child's life. The laws of all 50 states and the District of Columbia are addressed, and an appendix of sample legal forms and contracts is included.

This should be required reading for any woman about to make such a major life decision. (The Opportunity Press, P.O. Box 1821, Dept. 49, Aiken, South Carolina 29802. $29.95)

son. The first $500 raised will go to No on Prop. 102 and the rest to Bruce. Hope to see you all there.

Just as they promised, Chuck and Richard of M.E.N. managed to finish the video tape of the 1988 Mister Drummer contest on Monday and it is on sale now for $59.95 plus $2 for postage and handling. Cal residents must add $3.90 for tax. Again, M.E.N. has produced a classic masterpiece of this year's competition. The video is one minute short of an hour long; each contestant's fantasy, speech, and jock strap appearance is intact, with great sound and lighting.

The video opens with the Drummer Dancers executing their flawless version of the revolt of the slaves. Yes, Mr. Dominic, you pee'd with this one! The camera work is absolute, and close-ups are there just when you want them. You can charge to your VISA or Mastercard by calling (415) 621-0100. You'll definitely want this one.

The premiere will be shown sometime next week at the S.F. Eagle, but with all the Halloween madness on Monday night, I couldn't get a confirmation date from Terry.

The column will be short this week, but why bother to write without some dish?! I finally found out who that dude is in GG Park near the windmills with the two frisbees that have yet to see actual frisbee play. His name is Rick Slavsky, and he happens to be a bartender at the Midnight Moon, er, uh, Midnight Sun Tuesday through Friday nights. We all know what Rick does on Satur-days and Sundays. But do we know what he does on his breaks in that little alley just off Hartford at around 2245 hours? If you dare, check him out at the bar or on Hartford. And yes, I almost forgot, no frisbees on Hartford, The lates of screeches of the crazed ones is that a group of about 10 hot men are working on 7th Street at just about Folsom. They started laying these sewer pipes on Market Street about three weeks ago. I don't know how far South of Market they'll toil, but the queens in the vicinity are just ecstatic. Every one of the ten is "hot, hot, hot" according to several reports. One is a hunky German who's always in the ditch, just digging away, and when he comes up for air he is when he comes up for air he is always pawing his considerable appendage. There are three blondes and seven brunettes, and they're something to behold.

Former Mr. Drummer Sonny Cline was in town on Monday night, and I didn't know he was into feathers. You would be too if you'd seen this "body by God" wandering around the Eagle patio swathed in a beautiful American Indian costume that almost covered him. One very, very thin elastic band help up his "pouch" and he was so beautiful even one of the Walnettos (Walnut Creek) was enthralled. Hi Doc! Hi Jes! Hi Sonny!

It was a festive weekend all right; even the entire staff of the right; even the entire staff of the Border Cafe (8th and Folsom) was decked out in costumes Monday night. Like I've said before, thanks for the memories; it was beautiful; you were beautiful; our national holiday celebration was beautiful. See you all next week—my editor is screaming for this copy.

Halloween Revelry

aturday night. Rounding the corner onto 18th Street, I was immediately stopped by a police barricade at the corby a police parricade at the cor-ner of Collingwood. It had been hastily erected to protect an im-promptu crowd of Halloween revelers, roaming families, and out-of-neighborhood gawkers from auto traffic. Big deal.

But from the midst of this ruly group rose a big, big deal: a giant skeleton wafting in the wind to re-mind us to vote no on Prop. 102.

If Gov. Deukmejian had come to your door on Halloween, would you have pretended that there was no one at home? Of course mask and showed him out into the street with a resounding "No!"

According to Bruce Hilton's "AIDSweek" column in the Examiner, Deukmejain's endorsement of Prop. 102 comes in spite of recommendations to vote against it from "every major health organization, the business. against it from every major health organization, the business community, and most of the state's public health figures, in-cluding his own health director."

No on Prop. 102 justifies a trip to your polling place on Tuesday.

A fter the skeleton was removed from the street, the Femmes on Furlough, Petunia, Mr. Magic, various forms of vegetation, and Mary dragsters milled about before retreating to other livelier haunts. Mayor Art Agnos even stopped by the Twin Peaks to say hello.

The Bay Area Career Women held their annual Halloween dance at Bimbo's in North Beach Saturday night, too, a safe "costumes are optional" retreat.

The Halloween Ball for Operation Concern, Code Blue, the Western Roundup to benefit Liv-ing sober, and the Black Party at the Trocadero Transfer all hap-pened over the party weekend,

But it was rib-shaking, bone-But it was rib-shaking, bone-chattering, pore-sweating adven-ture on the Journey to the Center of the Earth at the Giftcenter that had it all. Heart-throbbing visuals and bombastic music by New York DJ Michael Fierman proved that State of the Art Pro ductions knows what state we all love to be in. Marga Gomez presented the prizes for the best costumes in her own cavewoman garb. With all the work Marga has done around our town, she deserves a prize for just being Tonight at Amelia's is the Mating Game for women and their friends, "Where Dreams Come True," featuring Mistress Kathy. Doors open at 9 p.m.

The Gay and Lesbian Freedom Day Parade may seem like a long way off, but a group of women will be meeting at Amelia's on Nov. 6 at 7 p.m. to plan a women's float for the parade. For more info, call 695-9526.

A Visit With Yet Another Christopher Isherwood

ur very own Chris, who gave the world some of the most memorable fiction of this century plus forthright biography, was also an ardent Vendantist. That is, from the late 1930s, when he was a recent immigrant to this country, through the rest of his life, Isherwood was an exponent of Vedanta, a Hindu religious philosophy whose development around the world in the 19th and 20th centuries sprang from the personality and teaching of Ramakrishna and, later Vivikenanda. Isherwood's own guru, Prabhavananda, was the master of the Los Angeles temple.

Alienated from the Christianity in which he was raised, Isher-wood found in the monistic Hinwood found in the monster rin-du religion an alternative much more sensible, humane, and deeply spiritual than the dualis-tic Puritan religion of his native culture. The latter he had come to regard as an imprisoning slav-ery clamping the adherent into a negative concept of himself, a fear of what lay after death, and a pervading sense of guilt about his most natural human impulses.

In Vedanta, Isherwood discov ered a divinity whose all-encom-passing nature accepted the acts of humankind as expected conse-quences deriving from that person's given nature and fate. There was no moral bookkeeping of virtue and sin, though the person's actions did influence the refinement of his soul—or its debasement. The only true purpose in life was a progress toward reunion with the Atman, the all.

Only then did the soul escape the round of life and death we call

While Isherwood was to discover much more to this mystical cover much more to this mystical faith than the above, the initial at-traction, especially as expounded by Swami Prabhavananda in his penetrating but also playful way, was like a strong tonic. For some-one like Isherwood, escaping a homophobic nation hurtling to-ward war, this enlightenment was a lovely key to a new life.

he Wishing Tree is a collection of Isherwood's writings on Vedanta from he early '40s through the '70s. the early '40s through the '70s. The sequence was arranged by Robert Adjemian. Both Isherwood's style and Adjemian's order lead the reader carefully, clearly into and through Vedantism. Though the belief is mystical, the presentation is never

But Isherwood doesn't avoid contradiction. Even though he— and many another religious phi-losopher—identifies Vedanta as monistic, there is no final avoidance of dualism. If each human has as his/her essence some part of the Atman and, while living, carried about flesh, there is duality right there. Even though the flesh is characterized as tem porary and illusory, it coexists with the spirit.

personality of a particular guru. Again, a duality.

Most of these pieces were first published in that pre-liberation time when even some of the boldest of gay pioneers were not pre-senting themselves publicly as "queer," to use Isherwood's own favorite characterization of himself and other gay people. Consequently, there is no discussion of what Vedanta might mean to gay people particularly. Perhaps Isherwood thought such an application unnecessary because Vedanta is for all.

One of most telling acts as a Vedantist was to translate, with Prabhavananda's help, the Bha-gavad Gita, the philosophical centerpiece of the immense epic The Mahabarata. In the Gita, Arjuna, the warrior prince and leader of his people, at first refuses to go into combat because he realizes that he would have to kill kinsmen and friends. In a long, detailed conversation, Krishna, who has temporarily taken human form and is acting as Arju-na's charioteer, convinces him that he must carry on with the war because it is a natural application of his character.

So it is central to Vedantic thought that one must accept one's own nature and act accordingly. Seen in that way, any human's homosexuality is not only personally acceptable, but a natural condition among all others. Maybe that was the primary appeal of this belief to our Chris erotic temptation as recently as the night before, on the beach. Glaser expounds on a number of ideas about religion and gays Fundamentalist gays fight a constant battle with themselves and their faith. They maintain logic-tight compartments where sex and church are never allowed to

The opposition seems hung up on form over faith. They are obsessed with legal fine points, rather than faith. They are the classic Pharisees.

As Glaser expresses it, "Sex-uality is a matter of fact; my Christianity is a matter of faith."

In the years since the emotion-upheaval of the 1976 meeting, Glaser continues to reach out to gays wherever he finds them. He has ministered through the Lazarus Project, a special outreach lovers embrace The Rake's Progress wholeheartedly, I find this work to be a very tedious intellectual exercise; the kind of academic masturbation which might seem very impressive within certain closed circles but which sure as hell fails to get my blood pumping.

The basic problem is that there is absolutely nothing in this opera which makes an audience care about any of the characters onstage. Even after Tom Rakewell has gone insane, his pathetic bab-bling in the final scene at Bedlam is nothing more than babbling. It does not offer much in the way of

That being said, I salute the San Francisco Opera's revival (which was well-staged, well-produced and fared much better by being presented with English Supertitles and a stronger cast of singers than those heard in 1982). Although I personally might not like The Rake's Progress, many others do—particularly those who are fans of David Hockney's sets and costumes—and, with all being fair in love, war and art, they are certainly entitled to their opinions.

Under John Cox's direction, baritone William Shimell scored strongly as Nick Shadow. Jonathan Green repeated his familiar, shtick-laden characterization of Sellem, the auctioneer. Victoria Vergara was a feisty Baba The Turk while Susan Patterson delivered an amiable Anne

While John Mauceri did a nice job on the podium, the real star of the evening was tenor Jerry Hadley as Tom Rakewell. Making a long-overdue San Francisco Opera debut, Hadley not only sang like an angel, but he also displayed some of the finest diction to be heard in this opera house in years. Although his final mad scene was touchingly performed, I left the War Memorial Opera House hungry for music Opera House hungry for including which was less astringent in nature as well as something of the other lands and the other lands are the other lan

The Spirit of Gay Games Continues

The Team S.F. Bowl-A-Thon is coming your way!

(Photo: A. Balderson)

by Will Snyder

Sometimes it is so easy to forget just how fast time really does fly. It seems hard to believe that the first Gay Games happened six years ago. So much has happened since then.

We lost Dr. Tom Waddell, the Gay Games founder. God only knows how many athletes have fallen. But then we get these wonderful little reminders of the strength of a community.

In a recent edition of the Examiner, buried at the very bottom of a story about Pres. Reagan's federal court appointments, was the notice that Vaughn R. Walker was rejected by the Senate for an appointment to the federal bench. For those with short memories or for those who are new to this community, Walker was the attorney who represented the United States Olympic Committee in its cowardly fight to deny this community the use of a single word, "Olympic," in the context of the "Gay Olympic Games."

The Senate's rejection was justice in its purest sense. Put aside this community's gripe with Walker for a moment. He is a coporate attorney and, from what I hear, a superb corporate attorney. But he has rarely argued in a courtroom. His experience is really quite lightweight for the kinds of cases which are bound to come up quite often.

But this is the kind of scenario I have been warning the gay and leshian community about for years when it comes to any embracing of Republican politics. Not only has Pres. Reagan been able to change the face of the Supreme Court (as a president, Bush probably would be able to, considering the ages of Justices Blackmun, Marshall, and perhaps White), but the federal courts are likely to change, too. Reagan already has filled federal benches with his kind of judges.

Sports Commentary

Walker, who has demonstrated conservative philosophies which have enraged civil rights groups, could have been another successful appointment for Reagan. Thankfully, the majority of this community joined with other folks and told the Senate to just say no (sorry about that, Nancy) to Ronnie about Walker.

So our community deserves a pat on the back for delivering a fair amount of payback to Walker. The vision is still fresh in my mind of Walker putting a lien on a dying Waddell's home (for attorney's fees), and then cynically lifting the lien after Waddell died. There haven't been many victories for our community in recent years, but this was a sweet

The victories we have achieved have been those of the human spirit. With AIDS battering this community, with the death of Waddell last year casting a pall over this community, it would have been easy for this community to simply throw up its hands and crawl into a dark corner someplace.

But what do we see? Resilience. Wonderful resilience.

Allen Balderson of Team San Francisco informs us that his group hopes to send 1,000 athletes from our town to Vancouver for Gay Games III. That's an incredible figure. Can you imagine what the scene will be like in British Columbia in 1990 when our 1,000 show up, along with the other multitudes from around the world?

Tom Waddell must be smiling up there.

Balderson warns, however, that it's going to take money to get our folks to Vancouver. That's why Team S.F. is sponsoring a special fundraiser to help raise some dough.

The fundraiser is called a "Bowl-a-Thon," and it will happen on Saturday, Nov. 5, at Park Bowl. The formula is simple enough. It's a pledge bowl, where four bowlers on a team will secure pledges. People need to sponsor you for the total number of pins you are able to knock down.

And as we say so often in our gay bowling leagues, don't worry about being a great bowler. Just have fun and help send our athletes to Vancouver.

Balderson says there are other incentives, too. If you're an athlete who plans on going to Vancouver, you can earn 'bonus bucks' which can be applied toward the purchase of team uniforms. The bonus bucks can also be used as admission to other Team S.F. events.

Balderson adds that a complete team uniform will be given to the bowler who has collected the most pledge money and also to the team captain whose team has collected the most pledge money.

POOL

A Long Haul for the Nine-Ball Champs

The players who arrived at the Park Bowl Saturday morning for the S.F. Pool Association's annual Bud Light Nine Ball Championship had all tasted success in having won their way into the finals at one of the qualifying tournaments which had narrowed the large field of entrants to 16.

This is the league's richest tournament with cash prizes to all finalists and gleaming trophies to the top four, but the proud distinction of claiming the title of the league's 1988 9-ball champion was fueling the finalists' aspirations.

E.Z., who who has made a habit of winning every tournament he's played in lately, was on hand to defend his crown. He seemed on course to add another to his long list of titles as he zapped James Inglis, 5-0, in the first round. Pete Peterson next fell victim by a 5-1 margin.

David Lee was E.Z's next opponent. Lee had finished second in last year's contest and has played this season on a Park Bowl team, the Mo Rauders. Lee sent E.Z. to the losers' bracket with a 5-3 victory.

David had already won a 5-4 first round match against Joe Ankenbrandt followed by a 5-3 besting of Jerry Hoover. He would next face Chuck Numbers for control of the winners' bracket.

Numbers plays for the White Swallow Wave and had begun the day with a 5-3 success over David Ranch. He then squeaked by Lisa Duncan, 5-4, and stung Lauren Ward, 5-2. His match with David Lee was knotted at 4-all when Lee claimed the fifth game and sat alone in the winners' bracket.

In this do-or-die losers' battleground, Lisa Duncan eliminated James Inglis, 5-2, and Barry White, 5-3. She needed one more win to make the Final Four. It would pit her against her teammate, Lauren Ward.

Ward had survived a 5-4 first round cliffhanger against Jack Dunbar and then won, 5-3, over Barry White, before her first defeat by Chuck Numbers.

Duncan jumped out to a 3-1 lead before a four-game comeback sent Ward to the Final Four. Lisa finished fifth, with a respectable 24-16 tournament record. Two DeLuxe Ducks remained in contention, but only one would advance beyond the next match. E.Z. would have to settle for fourth place after falling, 5-3. His overall record of 21-13 was the tournament's highest winning percentage.

Ward next had the opportunity of a rematch with Chuck Numbers. She jumped out to an early lead and left him in third place by a 5-3 margin. He scored 23-19 overall.

Now Ward would face the challenge of having to best the undefeated David Lee in two consecutive matches for the championship. The tournament was into its tenth hour and the fatigue was showing in both players. As the match progressed the momentum was clearly Lauren's as she rolled on to victory, 5-2, 5-1, for a combined record of 37.24

David Lee finished second for the second straight year with an overall total of 23-24.

Thanks to the dedicated oversight of tournament director Tim Chitwood and the cooperation of the Park Bowl staff, the 11-hour contest went smooth as silk.

Upcoming competitions include the MVP and the Women's West Coast Challenge Qualifier.

S.F. Club Dominates Its Wrestling Match

by Rick Thoman

San Francisco wound up dominating its own wrestling tournament last Saturday, Oct. 29. The Golden Gate Wrestling Club, host of the First Annual S.F. Invitational Wrestling Tournament, captured five gold, one silver, and one bronze medal. Sacramento took home one gold and one silver, and Los Angeles, which had been touted as a powerhouse team, mustered just two silvers and one bronze.

According to Golden Gate Wrestling Club president Gene Dermody, the turnout for the meet was less than had been anticipated, due primarily to the Halloween weekend date.

"We had hoped to have the tournament earlier in the month," said Dermody, "But we ran into some logistical hassles with the city in getting permission to use Collingwood Gymnasium, in securing insurance for the tournament, and other things." As a result, some of the team members outside of San

by Richard McPherson

While most leagues are well into their winter season of play, the Sunday Reno league at Japantown Bowl has just recently completed its summer season of play, and the Four Aces have emerged as the league winners. It was a close match right down to the wire, where the Aces and Bob's Biggies finished the season in a tie. The Four Aces came through in the end, leaving the Biggies in second place, followed by You Won't Forget in third. The winning team includes: Edgardo Rodriquez (130 average), Ron Driscoll (116), Del Oplinger (143), and Martial York (160). Bob's Biggies: Marvin Sloan (153), Geraldine Sloan (153), Dan Schick (132), and Bob Dean (156). You Won't Forget: Ray Padua (157), Garland Murphy (134), Larry Fuller (153), and Whirl Gray (174).

Whirl Gray won high scratch series honors with a 656 season high, with Shari Bradix emerging as the top woman scorer with a 550 effort. High Scratch Game: Steve Szasz 243, Geraldine Sloan 211; High Handicap Series: Donald Choy, Jr. 730, Joan Murphy 695; High Handicap Game: Peter Czech 288, Anne Bradix 245.

David Arnold (193 average) had the high series for the week of Oct. 18-23 at both Japantown and Park Bowls with a 647 series on games of 190, 227, 230 at JTown. Other bowlers at JTown shooting 210+ games were: Bruce Gresham (173) 235 and 222 (two different leagues), Richard Harry (162) 231, Doug Lucas (168) 221, Jesse Vargas (166) 219, Ken Gray (183) 218, Tim Kneis (164) 215, 204, Richard Cooper (1677) 215, Brad Nemeth (159) 213, Jim Barnes (178) 213, Chuck Adkins (165) 211, 206, and Tim Kneis (169) 211.

Honorable Mention (160 average and under): Tom Guarini (155) 218, Jim Magdaleno (141) 210, Russell Willis (148) 209, Bill Barto (147) 207, David Heranney (157) 204, Rick Canguingin (159) 202, Andy Dacanay (136) 202, John Blythe (132) 202, Mike Ermey (138) 201, and Gary Davis

(141) 200. Special congrats to Len Tumath, a 143 average in the Tuesday Community League who, after starting out with a 126 first game, came back in the second with a 222.

It was a light week of scoring in the Tavern Guild Leagues at Park Bowl with Dick Cavanee, 181 average, shooting one of the two 600s for the week. Cavanee shot a very consistent 612 series on games of 206, 196, and 210. Jeff Hettmansperger shot the other 600 with a 225/609 score, causing his 210 average to drop to 209—tough break, Jeff!

J.C. Halstead (199) had high

J.C. Halstead (199) had high game of the week with a 247 in the Thursday TGL, followed by Vince DiColla (161) with a 246 in the Wednesday TGL. In the same league Tom Sipple posted a 245.

Wrestling

Francisco failed to show up, L.A. being most noticeable, "I didn't realize how sacred the Halloween holiday was," Dermody added.

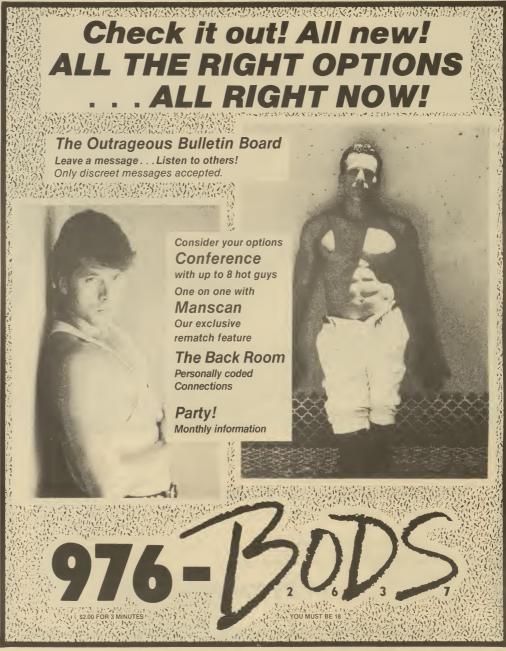

The most exciting match of the day was between two S.F. team members, Kriston Okuna and Peter Gomez. In what looked like a brutal exhibition, Okuna came out on top, with Gomez scoring in the gold, although both wrestlers looked even in style and speed.

Both Mickey Bailey and Carlis Sharpe showed off their amazing talent as they pinned all of their opponents in all of their matches. Leigh DeBose of Sacramento, who won the gold in his weight class at Gay Games II, barely edged newcomer George Ochoa, also of Sacramento, in the 126.5 lb. division. DeBose appeared surprised at the tenacity of Ochoa, whom he had never seen before this tournament, but hung on to take the match by one point.

Dermody was pleased with the results of the tournament, which included more than 20 matches and allowed most wrestlers an opportunity to wrestle two or three times. "It looks like this will be an annual event for us," he said. "L.A. will be holding a tournament in the spring, probably in April, and we'll continue to host a tournament in the fall, although not this close to Halloween anymore."

Welcome back to Randy Peterson, who was off the Park Bowl lanes for five weeks due to an arthritis attack (a bowler's worst nightmare). Yes, Randy's back and as fiesty as ever!

The Bowl-A-Thon at Park Bowl The Bowl-AThon at Park Bowl this Saturday, Nov. 5, is the happening sports event of the week. Teams of five athletes each have been out collecting pledges the past couple of weeks to raise money for Team S.F. I don't know about you, but my team has signed up at least $1,500 in pledges.

If you're not on a team yet, come to Park Bowl for either the 10 a.m. or 1:30 p.m. squads and bowl. You can signup and collect pledges next week.

For those bowlers who have the For those bowlers who have the urge to travel over Thanksgiving, the International Gay Bowling Organization (IGBO) will be sponsoring three tournaments around the U.S. The most significant of the three is MOIST in Miami, which will be the site of IGBO's mid-year meeting. (Contrary to rumors, it has been confirmed that there are enough en trary to rumors, it has been confirmed that there are enough entries for a Quorum, so the midyear meeting will be held.) MOIST info: Wilfredo (305) 227-6418. If MOIST doesn't do it for you, there's also HIT in Milwaukee (Bob [414] 278-8686) and WHOM in West Hollywood (Tim [213] 987-0231). All three tourneys will consist of team, doubles, and singles events. There's still time to signup, so better call now for additional info.
